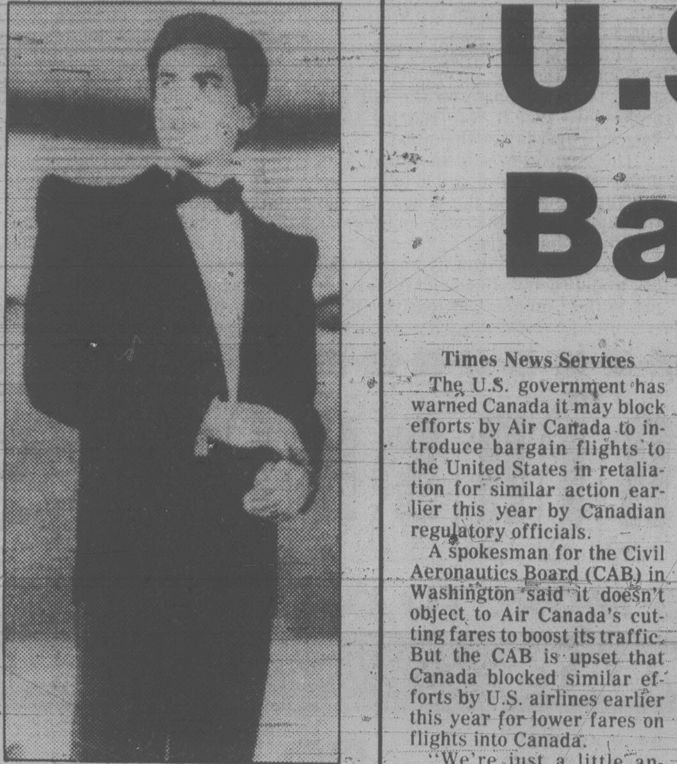
Paris Pied Piper Plays Peking



WIDE-SHOULDERED model struts his stuff at Peking show.

By JOHN FRASER
The Globe and Mail

PEKING — Radical chic hit Peking Monday in the form of a Pierre Cardin fashion show held in a revolutionary hall just a few blocks from the mausoleum of Chairman Mao Tse-tung.

If I hadn't seen it with my own eyes, it would have been impossible to believe.

In front of an audience of more than 300 Chinese textile workers and sellers, the Pied Piper of Paris fashion flaunted some of his most outrageous designs for men and women.

In China, people measure clothing by the number of cotton coupons they can get from the state every year, which doesn't leave much room for fashion.

See-through blouses, dresses with sufficiently generous slashes down to sides to expose the handsome flanks of Parisian models, gentlemen in thigh-tight pants, space-age shoulder pads — all this and more was displayed to the Chinese, who took it a lot better than most of the foreigners present.

Disco music blared out in the large hall of the Nationalities Palace on Chang An Avenue. The white stage and fashion ramp was adorned with Cardin's name in Chinese characters and the master himself was there to personally handle nearly every detail, including the remarkable feat of persuading Chinese officials to let the uninvited press inside.

Cardin came to China last year at the invitation of several Chinese state textile concerns. Impressed by the quality of silks, cashmeres and other fabrics, his firm has decided to import large quantities for his fashion lines. Also impressed by cheap labor costs in China, Cardin has arranged to have some of his less exotic lines produced in China for export.

The fashion show was designed to show Chinese textile workers what the world of Western fashion was like, and they sure found out. The Chinese, no doubt fully aware of the propensities of the Western press with a story like this, made sure no journalist got an invitation, and entrance was only possible by invitation. What the Chinese hadn't figure on was Cardin's own love of press coverage, nor how ferocious and courageous the Peking press corps can be (when their numbers are sufficiently large to summon up the ferocity and the courage).

The result was 15 minutes of sheer pandemonium at the entrance gates, as journalists traded insults and threats with the toughest-looking Chinese bouncers you ever saw.

In between was Cardin, a mild-mannered and soft-spoken man who at this precise moment resembled nothing so much as the ball in the fiercest game of ping pong ever played. At one point, he himself could not get back into the hall because he couldn't produce an invitation.

It was at this juncture that the Japanese press corps arrived in a solid phalanx and an irreversible forward movement began which could have barged through the Great Wall if necessary.

Earlier in the day, Cardin had unleashed some of his wilder concoctions on the masses. Some of his models were sent into the streets where the people of Peking provided

U.S. May Block Bargain Flights

Times News Services

The U.S. government has warned Canada it may block efforts by Air Canada to introduce bargain flights to the United States in retaliation for similar action earlier this year by Canadian regulatory officials.

A spokesman for the Civil Aeronautics Board (CAB) in Washington said it doesn't object to Air Canada's cutting fares to boost its traffic. But the CAB is upset that Canada blocked similar efforts by U.S. airlines earlier this year for lower fares on flights into Canada.

"We're just a little annoyed and have really been wrestling with this thing," a CAB official who asked not to be identified said today.

In Ottawa, an external affairs spokesman said Canada hopes the U.S. will stop short of blocking bargain flights on certain American routes.

Canada is willing to give American airlines approval for matching cuts in rates on the same routes — Montreal-New York, Toronto-Los Angeles and Vancouver-New York, the spokesman said.

Further, Canada believes the short period involved for the bargain rates is a mitigating factor, he said. The bargain rates apply March 27 to May 7.

So far, all the U.S. has done is give a warning under the 1974 bilateral air agreement that it is dissatisfied with the Canadian decision to permit bargain rates on some routes.

Canada and the United States have an air agreement, last negotiated in 1974, that is to be discussed here April 18-20 by representatives of CAB and the Canadian Transport Commission. The issue may be settled by negotiation then if not earlier.

The CAB says it hasn't yet made up its mind to block the Air Canada proposals, which basically are for temporary fare cuts for flights to most U.S. points except Florida. But a "notice of dissatisfaction" was filed by U.S. officials which gives them the right to suspend the Canadian fares if it is felt they might hurt the domestic industry.

"We generally like the lower Air Canada fares and we have so indicated to the government of Canada and to the air transport committee (of the Canadian Transportation Commission)," the CAB official said.

Among U.S. airlines that have had fare proposals blocked by Canadian regulatory officials are Western Air Lines, United Air Lines, Allegheny Airlines and Hughes Airwest.

Their proposals included two-passenger excursion fares to allow a companion accompanying a full-fare passenger to fly for half-price at certain times.

Most of the objections to these and other U.S. proposals for lower cross-border

Another Treaty Tempest

Times News Services

Israel and Egypt clashed today over the future of Jerusalem and the Palestinians in their first public disagreement since U.S. President Jimmy Carter's Middle East visit.

Egyptian Prime Minister Mustafa Khalil, however, said he doubted the dispute would impede the treaty signing, scheduled for next Monday in Washington.

Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin told his parliament that Israel would never allow a Palestinian state in the West Bank of the Jordan River or the Gaza Strip or return East Jerusalem to the Arabs.

Begin said he was replying to a statement by Khalil that Israel will have to withdraw to the borders that existed before the 1967 Arab-Israeli war, surrender Arab Jerusalem and accept Palestinian statehood. He declared:

"My dear, honorable Dr. Khalil, write this down: Jerusalem, the one Jerusalem, is Israel's eternal capital. It will never be divided again."

In Cairo, Khalil said Begin's statement "spoils the atmosphere" of the treaty and said called it "an unsuccessful beginning to a period in which we had hoped that all parties would work . . . for a just and lasting peace and a compre-

Saudis Retaliating For Ontario Law

TORONTO (CP) — Saudi Arabia, Canada's largest trading partner in the Middle East, is tightening its visa-granting policies in response to Ontario's law prohibiting companies from supporting an Arab boycott of trade with Israel.

Omar Bamanie, a counsellor with the Saudi Embassy in Ottawa, said Ontario's response to the Arab boycott might result in Canada's losing millions of dollars in contracts with Saudi Arabia.

Saudi Arabia might increase its protest of the Ontario law by refusing to deal with Canadian companies. In January, Saudi Arabia began restricting visas to Canadian businessmen.

The Ontario legislation, passed last November, makes it illegal for Ontario companies to agree to boycott Israel. The law provides for fines of up to $5,000 for individuals and $50,000 for companies.

Saudi Arabia accounted for $234 million in Canadian [illegible] in 1978. Canada ex[illegible] worth [illegible] million to Israel in 1978.

Bamanie said his country could go elsewhere for the products it purchases from Canada and said the Ontario legislation is against Canadian interests.

External affairs department officials said there have been recent meetings with officials at the Saudi Embassy to try to ease their concerns.

THE BYRDS
I SAY LET'S ELIMINATE THE SUGGESTION BOX AND HAVE THE STAFF MAKE THEIR THREATS IN PERSON.

Winnipeg Still Wintry

WINNIPEG (CP) — Freezing drizzle closed Winnipeg International Airport today, and motorists were being advised against travel in many areas of southern Manitoba.

Icy runways caused the airport to shut down at 1:45 a.m. PST and a Transport Canada spokesman said a decision on whether to reopen would be made later today.

The runways were covered with up to half an inch of ice. Cold temperatures accompanying the drizzle meant that chemicals used to melt the ice could not handle the problem.

Meanwhile, the provincial department of highways was advising against travel in the Selkirk, Carman, Brandon, Minnedosa and Dauphin areas where highways were reported to be extremely slippery.

Highways in the rest of the province were generally bare.

A spokesman at the Winnipeg bus depot said most buses were [illegible] on time or about 15 [illegible] late.

Loto Lagging in Sales, Trying for a Miracle

OTTAWA (CP) — An Ontario Conservative said Monday lagging ticket sales prompted Loto Canada to enter into a special marketing arrangement with Miracle Mart which he said will eventually destroy the lottery system.

Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo) said Loto Canada will be able to sell only 3.5 million of 5.5 million tickets for draw No. 12, to be held March 30. Two million of the $10 tickets, worth $20 million, will be returned unsold, he told the Commons.

In an attempt to bolster sales, the federal lottery corporation had signed a special arrangement to sell "merchandising giant" Miracle Mart 5,000 tickets, bypassing Loto Canada's own wholesalers.

Sports Minister Iona Campagnolo said she would ask Loto Canada for a report. She later told reporters sales of 3.5 million tickets would not be out of line with usual sales.

"Lotteries go up and down. They have fluctuating sales."

Beatty said the deal with Miracle Mart will give the company a 100-per-cent larger profit on lottery ticket sales than other retailers get. Miracle Mart would make 90 cents on every $10 ticket sold, while retailers who buy from Loto Canada wholesalers made only 45 cents.

Beatty said he and other MPs have had phone calls from Loto Canada's wholesalers and retailers who are upset by the Miracle Mart deal.

He said Loto Canada originally predicted it would sell 4.5 million tickets for this draw.

Union Bosses Enter

VANCOUVER (CP) — Several top officials of the Teamsters Union crossed a picket line Monday set up by striking office workers at the Teamsters head office here.

Peter Wilson, a Teamsters spokesman, said the move was necessary to prevent a disruption in crucial union business. Officials crossed the line in their role as employers, he said.

A spokesman for Local 15 of the Office and Technical Employees Union said about 25 union members started the picket action because the Teamsters have refused to sign a master contract settlement that has been agreed to by most of the 80 other trade unions that employ OTEU members in their offices.

The Teamsters also are trying to take away union involvement in hiring procedures, she said.

Secret Report Raps Logging

By MARK HUME
Times Staff

Logging steep mountain slopes in the Queen Charlotte Islands causes slides and massive soil erosion, according to a confidential forest service report obtained by the Times.

The study directly contradicts official statements by the forest service that the danger of slides in the area is minimal.

The report, completed last February, says there are no preventive methods known to logging science and the only way to avoid slides in some areas is to leave trees uncut.

The report is based on a study undertaken in the Rennell Sound area, where the provincial forest service and federal fisheries authorities are currently battling over a 40-acre tract of timber overlooking a salmon stream.

The forest service wants the timber harvested but fisheries has banned cutting claiming it will trigger slides.

But the report states clearly that because of steep grades, heavy rainfall and intense seismic activity, slopes in the Rennell Sound area are extremely unstable.

The document says tree roots mesh the slopes together, and once the timber is removed slides are inevitable in steep areas.

It says since February, 1978, there have been 71 slides in logged zones around Rennell Sound.

The average area covered by slides was 840 square metres and one slide wiped out a 73,566-square-metre section and caused the temporary damming of a stream.

The report says the majority of debris avalanches took place within three years following logging.

"Time of failure after logging and landscape position suggest that debris flows are a direct result of tree canopy removal and the subsequent increase in soil moisture and deterioration in root strength," states the document.

"The biological nature of the reinforcing root web becomes apparent following

Gov't Planning to Cut Debate On 'Pre-Election' Energy Bill

OTTAWA (CP) — The government made sure Monday that its emergency energy bill, held up for days by bickering between Liberals and the opposition, would get through the Commons this week.

Energy Minister Alastair Gillespie announced that the government would move to limit debate on the bill and make sure that it received the final vote by Thursday at the latest.

The opposition said the move was unnecessary and proceeded to back up its point by ending the debate on the report on the bill that was sent from a Commons committee.

That made it virtually certain the bill would receive third and final reading in the Commons at least by Wednesday — and possibly today — and then would be sent to the Senate for fast consideration.

After that the government can get on with debate on legislation that would permit referendums on constitutional matters. That legislation has received committee consideration and now needs third reading.

The energy bill would allow the government to allocate oil and coal resources in times of international energy crises. The government could impose rationing.

The government wants passage of both that bill and the referendum bill before Prime Minister Trudeau calls his spring general election.

When Energy Minister Alastair Gillespie dropped the guillotine on debate he accused the opposition of stalling progress of the bill for political reasons.

The opposition denounced the measure as a heavy-handed example of government bungling, arguing that the bill was already assured passage.

It blamed the government for delays to this point.

T. C. Douglas (NDP—Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands) said his party never indicated it would hold up the legislation.

Both the main opposition parties say they support the need to have a bill in place to meet a potential crisis but are concerned that excessive powers are provided for in the present bill.

The Pied Piper of Peking

a suitably bizarre backdrop for some fashion display pages in Paris Match magazine.

Foreign residents who saw this scene were suitably outraged at the decadence of it all and some diplomats who had managed to get official invitations were genuinely shocked at seeing the simple and "honestly" dressed Chinese confronted by this example of Western materialism at its most trivial.

But the Chinese weren't shocked. I avoided talking to any of the textile people who knew what the whole caper was about and checked what the reactions were among the ordinary staff workers of the nationalities hall (and their friends whom they had sneaked in to watch the circus).

For one thing, many Chinese are not quite so enamored of their simple, honest clothing as sympathetic Western friends might think. Young women I spoke to were perfectly capable of separating Cardin's wild, headline-grabbing costumes from the far more conservative and pleasant looking clothing that is his main line. They liked some of the plain dresses that had pleated skirts and all the rest was pure theatre — some sort of space-age version of a Peking opera.

In a deft and sensitive touch, possibly aimed at a future market that other fashion designers would never even dream of scratching, Cardin included three Asian models (one was Japanese and the other two Eurasian) who never once appeared in anything outlandish. They wore dresses or skirts that were conservative, decorous and yet with enough flair to give the Chinese an idea of the possible for their own infant fashion industry.

Still, it was an extraordinary occasion. There have been some wild sights in China during the past year, as this country reaches out to the West to see what's going on, but it will be hard to beat the front row of comrades of both sexes in their blue cotton pants and jackets on top of two layers of long-underwear watching a slinky model from Paris swish by sans brassiere in the flimsiest little number this side of Damascus.

Secret Erosion Report Cites Logging Threat

harvesting — it decomposes. The decomposition of small roots, one centimetre and less, is of particular importance as they have the greatest effect upon slope stability.

"The reduction in root strength is reflected in an increase in soil mass movements."

The report goes on to say that with reforestation the root web is re-established — but that process takes 10 to 20 years following cutting, and in that time numerous slides will occur.

"Debris slides resulting from root strength loss can not be avoided. The maintenance of an organic root web is essential for slope stability."

The report warns that the many steep gullies around Rennell Sound are held together by the forest's roots.

The report adds that debris avalanches generally transport debris and sediment to stream channels.

Federal fisheries authorities contend that if logging occured in the disputed site it would cause sediment to be deposited in nearby Riley Creek, one of the major salmon producing streams on the west coast of the Charlottes.

Grounded Freighter Rescued

VANCOUVER (CP) — A 148-metre Yugoslavian-registered freighter was pulled free by two tugs after it ran aground early today in the city's harbor.

A coast guard spokesman said the 9,000-ton Promina apparently overshot its berth at Pier Seven at Vancouver Terminals. Officials had to wait until high tide to free the ship.

The freighter was not seriously damaged.

the weather

The province remains under the influence of a favorable circulation pattern that moved most weather disturbances to the north. Several reporting sites set record high temperatures for the day on Monday. Victoria broke a 32 year record when the mercury rose to 17 degrees. Also, Tofino registered 16 and even northerly Terrace residents saw their thermometers near the 12 degree mark. An idiosyncracy of Mother Nature was evident Monday as closeby Sandspit saw only 5 degrees-the lowest maximum seen on that day since 1955. The same weather pattern will persist until at least Wednesday, resulting in mostly sunny skies and above normal daily high temperatures.

There Wasn't Any Affair: Kennedy Aide

A flat denial came from Sen. Edward Kennedy's press secretary Monday that the Massachusetts Democrat ever had an affair with Margaret Trudeau. Maclean's magazine said Monday that Mrs. Trudeau had a "brief romantic" fling with Kennedy, which contributed to the break-up of her marriage. In Washington, Kennedy spokesman Tom Southwick called the story "absolutely untrue." He said Kennedy "has met her (Margaret) once or twice, just casually met her" at social functions. He called the article by Judith Timson "very strange — just a flat-out statement by the author and doesn't quote anyone." The prime minister's office refused comment and Timson merely said Monday that she stood behind her sources. She commented however: "If Margaret was telling the truth, it is difficult to determine which was the more monumental indiscretion — doing it or talking about it."

Another voice from the Golden Age of Radio is stilled. . Minerva Pious, who played the Bronx housewife Mrs. Nussbaum on the Fred Allen radio show for 20 years, has died in a New York hospital at the age of 75. Miss Pious' comic character, who consistently butchered the English language, was one of the regulars on the Allen's Alley show of the 1930s and 1940s.

Russian gymnast Olga Korbut-Bortkevich has given birth to a 7-pound, 4-ounce boy and says "it was easier to give birth to the baby than compete in the Olympics." The wife of Soviet pop singer Leonid Bortkevich, she retired from competition last year and now coaches Soviet gymnastics.

A former prostitute shook the Huey Newton murder trial in Oakland, Calif., Monday by saying she lied when she testified that she saw the Black Panther leader shoot and kill another streetwalker.

Michelle Jenkins, 20, appeared as a surprise final defence witness. Two weeks ago, she testified for the prosecution and identified Newton as the gunman who shot fellow-prostitute Kathleen Smith.

"I don't know who it was," she now claims. All I can say is that I saw a person that night."

It was a costly lesson for a Corpus Christi, Texas, high-school student, but he says he's learned his lesson now. Richard Salinas who hit a teacher in 1978 has to pay teacher Eugene Sloan $2,396 in damages. Salinas said a hallway incident for which he and a friend were suspended from school led to the attack. He said he did nothing wrong to warrant the suspension. "I said I was going to get even," Salinas said. Six months later, as Sloan was seated grading papers, Salinas punched him, causing cuts and a black eye. "I thought I might get away with it," Salinas said.

Hustler magazine owner Larry Flynt, crippled by a sniper during a Georgia pornography trial last year, hopes "a well-rounded jury" and not a bunch of "diehard Baptists" is selected today to try him on obscenity charges in Atlanta. "Let's face it — if I get a group of diehard Baptists who are all pushing 60, and go to church every Sunday, I'm in trouble," Flynt said in an interview in his heavily-guarded hotel suite Monday night.

Former U.S. president Richard Nixon is obsessed with a desire to glorify publicly his wife Pat but she is equally determined to stay out of the public eye, friends and family members were quoted Monday as saying in McCall's magazine. The current issue of the magazine says Mrs. Nixon's desire to remain secluded is based on a fear of ridicule by her husband's enemies and on uncertainty about her own physical condition following a stroke in 1976.

Here's one paycheque that country singer Johnny Paycheck doesn't want. The performer and his agent, CBS Inc., have filed a copyright-infringement suit in an effort to halt marketing of old recordings which the singer said he made for demonstration purposes. The suit, seeking $1 million in damages, was filed in U.S. District Court in Manhattan in connection with a single entitled Down on The Corner at a Bar Called Kelly's, and an album, Johnny Paycheck - The Outlaw. The complaint said unauthorized material was taken from demonstration records Paycheck made early in his career, from 1964 to 1971, and "was never intended to be released."

Whisky Exports Stopped in U.K. Strike

LONDON (AP) — Eighteen customs men walked off their jobs Monday in Scotland, halting the flow of millions of dollars in whisky exports.

New labor disputes also hit Britain's hospital service, already suffering from almost nine weeks of sporadic walkouts.

About 450 of the country's 2,300 hospitals were affected by striking ambulance drivers and manual workers, responding to reports that nurses — who have refused to strike — will receive a special pay deal.

Customs officers at the Coatbridge depot in Glasgow stopped work indefinitely Monday, halting scotch whisky exports worth $28 million a week.

Union leaders say a wage comparability study with the private sector, due for completion April 1, will show civil servant salaries lagging 20 to 35 per cent and recommend some of the difference be made up.

The civil service strikes — which have closed Scottish courts, held up property transfers, interrupted government subsidy payments and made it difficult for the treasury to calculate its bank balance — so far have involved about 1,300 civil servants.

Hospital and ambulance workers belong to public service unions whose seven-week strike was partially settled 10 days ago when most garbagemen, school caretakers and other "dirty jobs" workers returned to work.

Three of the four public service unions representing the 1.1 million workers — whose lowest paid members earn about £42 ($87) a week — accepted a nine-per-cent increase pending the pay comparability study expected to yield about 15 to 20 per cent more by April, 1980.

The National Union of Public Employees, whose membership includes half Britain's 17,000 ambulance drivers, has continued to strike, sticking to an original pay demand of a £60 ($140) a week minimum.

Representatives of 130,000 nurses, who say their average pay is about £58 ($130) a week, aroused considerable public sympathy by refusing to strike. They pressed their 15-per-cent pay demand through vigils outside Parliament.

Wishful thinking

Education Minister Pat McGeer has long had a dream of a Science City somewhere in B.C., a model community devoted entirely to technology, research and development.

Thus it is entirely consistent that he is running an energetic campaign to have the Lower Mainland considered as a site for an international project to develop a workable system of harnessing nuclear fusion to provide energy. Such a project, described as "the largest international research and development effort ever" by one Canadian source, would be an incredible keystone for any such development.

At the same time, British Columbians should not hold their collective breath waiting for such an international laurel to be bestowed on the province.

The news stories are saying that B.C. is being considered as a site for the project, but it seems the person doing most of the considering is McGeer himself.

First, it is anything but clear that Canada will be invited to find a site for the project at all. A joint study on international co-operation in fusion research is not expected to be made public until the end of this year. Although the U.S. is interested in having the project situated in Canada, the Soviet Union, equally involved in the proposal, would rather see it set up in Finland.

A senior Ottawa civil servant said this week that any consideration of a specific site is highly premature. It was his view that between three and five more years of negotiation would be necessary before the partners would reach the stage of discussing a precise location for the project.

Second, even if Canada is chosen as the country for the research station, B.C. does not appear to be the leading contender within the country for the project. That honor apparently goes to Varennes, Quebec, a location favored by the federal government.

Varennes has two important advantages lacking in the Lower Mainland. First, it is the site of a sophisticated, high-voltage power plant now, a requirement for any fusion research station. Second, it is already being considered as the site for a small fusion research facility to be operated by Canada alone. The National Research Council is funding a study on the feasibility of setting up the project at Varennes.

With those advantages, it seems most unlikely that B.C. would succeed in beating out the Quebec site for the plant, should it be awarded to Canada.

This may, in the end, prove to be all to the good. Although the project will undoubtedly provide hundreds of jobs and much prestige, it may also prove to be an immense environmental risk. The challenge of developing usable fusion plants is described as the challenge of harnessing the power of a hydrogen bomb.

Like a hydrogen bomb, the amount of radioactivity produced is tremendous. Even worn-out reactor parts may have to be treated as radioactive waste. Scientists will have to develop means of containing a highly radioactive gas.

McGeer will doubtless be much disappointed if B.C. is not awarded the international project, but the rest of the province might be happier with a less dangerous keystone for any Science City.

Jean Monnet

He never led a government, was never even elected to political office. His name was not well-known, even among his fellow countrymen. Yet Jean Monnet, who died last week, was one of the architects of modern Europe and, as such, a key figure in the post-war western world.

Monnet, 91 at the time of his death, had played an important role in international affairs since the 1920s when he became deputy secretary-general of the League of Nations. His greatest achievements, however, came in the late 1940s and early 1950s when he persuaded the leaders of several major European powers to band together in the Common Market.

After the Second World War, this international businessman with particular interests in the brandy industry, became convinced that western Europe could recover from the havoc the war had wreaked much more successfully if only the nation states involved would co-operate closely, especially on economic issues.

Considering himself a "broker of ideas," he brought together European leaders, first to form a "community" of steel and coal producers. Within a few years, this had expanded to become the Common Market, a general economic and trade alliance with six members comprising the bulk of the economic power of continental western Europe.

It was the beginning. Since then three other countries (Great Britain, Ireland and Denmark) have joined the Common Market. It has taken over responsibility for its member countries in several other areas such as agriculture. Other countries (Greece, Spain and Portugal) are applying for membership. A European monetary system, linking together the currencies of member countries, is now being implemented.

And later this year, Europeans will for the first time directly elect members to a European parliament in which some see the beginning of a much greater political union among the states of the European Economic Community.

Monnet's dream was a United States of Europe. He did not live to see it come true. But his work laid out the pathway that may see such an organism come into being before the end of this century.

Why Trudeau was chippy

VANCOUVER — His chippiness was constant.

Maybe it was because, while Prime Minister Trudeau was on his way in to speak to the students, one of them asked him about his policies on marijuana, and after Trudeau had explained to them, snapped back: "Yeah, but unlike Margaret, we don't have the RCMP to tell us when to burn the incense to hide the smell."

Maybe it was because — her again — Trudeau and Margaret have yet to agree on how to share between them the responsibility for looking after the children during the time that both of them will be away from Ottawa, he out selling himself and she out selling her book.

Maybe it was because Trudeau all along knew that the last item on his Vancouver schedule would be the least pleasurable one, a visit to his personal dentist, Harry Gelfant, as a precaution against being slowed in mid-campaign by a filling in need of being filled.

Worst with students

Or maybe it's because Trudeau has decided that since Canadians seem to be passive these days, the best way to stir them up is for him to be aggressive. Whichever the cause, his aggressiveness was abundant.

In manner, Trudeau was at his chippiest with the students. A noon hour crowd of more than 3,000 of them, high spirited and noisy but friendly, crammed into the Student Union Building at the campus of the University of British Columbia to hear him.

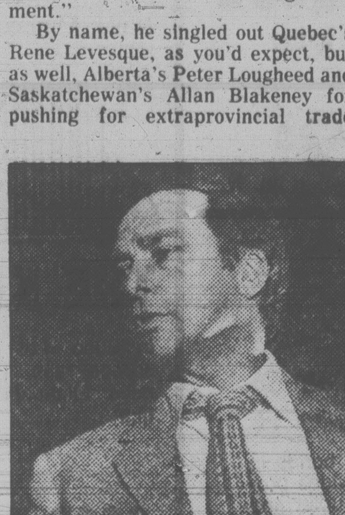
"Let's see if you can ask some intelligent questions," said Trudeau for openers and then bounced questions back at the students who had asked them.

Two-thirds of the way through the affair, one student reached the microphone to ask: "Why are you being so hostile?"

Taken off guard, Trudeau apologized. "From now on I'll smile," he said. By the evening Trudeau's guard was up again. The students, he told his audience at a fund-raising dinner, had been a "group of sophomores."

In his messages, Trudeau was chippy at just about everyone. The provincial premiers, he warned, were out "to weaken the federal government."

By name, he singled out Quebec's Rene Levesque, as you'd expect, but as well, Alberta's Peter Lougheed and Saskatchewan's Allan Blakeney for pushing for extraprovincial trade powers, Ontario's Bill Davis for opposing Ottawa's energy rationing legislation and New Brunswick's Richard Hatfield for criticizing Ottawa's referendum legislation.



PIERRE TRUDEAU
. . . faces hecklers at UBC

Most of Trudeau's chips fell, naturally enough, upon Joe Clark.

The Conservative leader dared to do nothing except "parrot the opinions of Tory premiers," said Trudeau.

"I have no confidence he is ready to stand up and be counted on any issue."

To Trudeau's abrasiveness, even if it was caused in part by personal pressures, there was an evident political point. The two days here served Trudeau as a last dry run before the election that, by all the signs and portents, he will call very soon.

He used the occasion to test-market a campaign style of himself as a lone hero locked in combat with enemies who could destroy the country, whether intentionally like Levesque or unintentionally like other provincial premiers.

To accentuate the image of himself as solitary embattled hero, Trudeau, before the students, adopted his familiar pose of thumbs hooked into his belt. At the close of his fund raising dinner speech, Trudeau broke away from his text to declare that he had been "called" a High Nooner but that he had "no apology to make for taking a stand on controversial issues."

The election mattered, said Trudeau, because it would decide "the survival of Canada as a strong country."

Some liked it

A single, strong man for a single, strong country, in other words.

The students, who'd arrived to hear and cheer him, left upset as will be the premiers when Trudeau's words get back to them. But I can report that at least two Vancouverites understood the message and liked it.

In a hotel lobby, I caught this conversation between two well-dressed citizens:

First: "I'll never vote for that (expletive deleted) Trudeau. He's wrecked the economy and he can't even control his wife."

Second: "Whaddya mean, can't control his wife? He blackened her eye and threw her out of the house. Joe Clark could never do that."

First: "Yeah. You're right. Clark'd never dare do it."

To the chippy strong man goes the wife-beating vote.

TV's bright lights irk MP

OTTAWA — Parliament has undergone a subtle change now that television has been admitted to the House of Commons, and the change is not an improvement, according to Howard Johnston, Conservative MP for Okanagan-Boundary.

He is one of several MPs who are having second thoughts about the decision to allow television to carry the proceedings in the commons live beyond the walls of the parliament building.

Johnston was opposed to admitting the cameras from the beginning. But he was overruled by the all-party committee which decide to recommend in favor of allowing the cameras into the house. Now he is telling some fellow MPs "I told you so" when they voice reservations about the practice of permitting the television cameras to record events in the Commons.

Very TV-conscious

"Now we've let the camel inside the tent and it will be taking over," he said.

"We are a representative parliament, elected to talk to each other, to debate and to legislate. We are also elected to represent our constituents. But it is the debate and the act of legislating that comes in for attention from the media. That is the most visible part of our operations.

"Now the MPs are very conscious of the television cameras, especially since the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation has started carrying the picture across the country. The members are consciously talking to the nation," he said.

He said that the house television committee had recommended that the television in the commons be operated as an electronic Hansard; that it be restricted in what it focusses on inside the Commons. He predicts that this will change as the public demands to see on their television set what is transpiring inside the house, not just focussing on the MP who is speaking during a debate or during the question period.

"I knew that it would be futile to try and curb the camera and it is gradually changing our institution. It is not parliament as it was before the cameras invaded the chamber," said the opposition MP.

"It is becoming show business and that is inevitable with television cameras now focussing on the members. Even our privileges will be altered. Before the cameras were in the chamber a member of parliament enjoyed the privilege of being protected from libel or slander actions if he voiced strong criticism in the house," he said.

So far there has been no legal test to determine if those privileges still exist for a member of parliament whose speech has been televised and is carried to the country direct from the floor of the commons. However, eventually such a test will come, Johnston predicted.

"Now we don't talk to each other, or debate with one another, now we talk to the nation. There is a difference," he said.

In addition the powerful lights needed for television make it impossible to stay in the chamber continuously. Johnston said he finds it physically impossible to remain in his place in the chamber after the question period because of the glare from the television lights.

Wear dark specs

At one point he considered wearing a visor or eye shades, but decided the best way to cope, was to leave the house for a period to give his eyes a rest. Some members wear dark glasses, there are a few who wear visors to shade their eyes.

Johnston said he continued to perform his duties and speak in the house the way he did before the advent of the cameras. But he pointed out that he was not coming back as he had not been nominated "So I have a certain freedom."

However, he said, his freedom to act must give way to the "orchestrated efforts on both sides of the house" to provide a good impression for the television cameras.

Tibet's liberation

In David Bartell's letter of March 9 he states that "Tibet is still an issue." I ask for whom. For the thousands of lamas, lords and hirelings who (guiltily?) retreated over nearby borders when their armed rebellion against the socialist republicans failed? Certainly there is no "issue" in the minds of the approximately one million former serfs and slaves in Tibet who are now truly liberated.

It was significant that when I opened the discussion after the showing of the film, by asking the only Tibetan in the audience what he thought of the portrayal, his immediate reply was "good!" Like the youthfully honest Dalai Lama, that former lama who had fled was also later 'worked on' by his associates.

Until those who decry the evidence of the present can provide documentary refutation of its worth, when it is weighed on the scales of humanity against the evidence of the past, then the only "question" remaining, I think, is: what are their motives?

If Mr. Bartell attended the following presentation in our series, he now knows that in the opinion of sensitive native Canadians who visited China in 1977 the "fate of minority peoples" in its autonomous regions is an example of civilized partnership with a national government that they wish would be copied here . . .

Yes, indeed! We have much to learn from China. — S.E.W. Stokes, President, Canada-China Friendship Association, 2720 Heron Street.

Turned turtle

A few days ago I received in the mail a folder from the philatelic section of the Canada Post Office, describing a new issue of 17 cent stamps, that I wish to comment upon.

Women's lib seems to have gotten through to the post office, for they are issuing male and female stamps in their new "Code It" series. At least the hands are described in the production data sheet as such.

But I wish particularly to call attention to the new logo, or crest of the postal service in which they depict on a 17 cent stamp, the portrait of a turtle. Doubtless intended to call attention to our wonderful "Twenty Four" delivery service (?).

In the hope that this letter reaches you in 1979. — George A. Wiggan, 5493 Seawood Terrace.

Balanced budget

This letter is in reference to your editorial Fiscal Irresponsibility of Feb. 10.

On the one hand you say "We have long been opposed to the idea of having a government run up deficits during bad economic times in the hope of stimulating the economy" and on the other hand you decry the recording of a modest surplus.

In running a balanced budget over the period of an economic cycle, a government either has to accumulate a modest surplus to use as the economic stimulant or borrow money and repay the debt when and if revenues increase on the recovery phase of the business cycle. The trouble is that all too often government expenditures increase faster than revenues whether the growth in the economy is accelerating or slowing down. Just look at the budget performance of the federal government and certain other provinces over the last 10 to 15 years.

At least in financing economic stimulation from revenue surplus, taxpayers receive all the benefit, including the interest earned on surplus funds. In the case of borrowed money, however, not only must the interest cost and repayment of the principal be made, all too often at the expense of future generations, but also there is no guarantee the interest payments remain in the province to benefit it in some other way.

The government has not been sitting on any revenue surplus. In my budget speech last year I revealed the commitment of the $76.1 million revenue surplus of fiscal year 1976/77 to a number of economy-stimulating, job-creating programs.

Your editorial implies that a government should strive for a pure balancing of revenue and expenditure. If the province had full control of its destiny it might be possible to be closer to the mark, but we do not. The level of our forest revenue, for example, depends significantly upon the demand for lumber in the United States and the international supply of pulp and paper. The same is also true for our minerals, coal and natural gas. Also, estimates of revenue and expenditure are made for as much as 18 months or more in advance of events occurring. As my report for the nine months ended December 31, 1978 indicated, over $77 million of the increase in revenue above forecast was from forestry. The current U.S. demand for lumber has exceeded our expectations and, I might add, even that of the industry itself.

Your statement that drastic cutbacks are being made in some services [illegible] is not true. The [illegible] health care in the [illegible] of this fiscal year [illegible] in the long term care [illegible] is a new program and the [illegible] expenditure is a case of overestim[illegible] the demand for the service.

The government has demonstrated that it is possible to expand, improve and introduce services to all sectors of B.C. while lessening the demands for the support of the provincial government. We are not "deliberately keeping money out of the economy." It is being put back in through reduced taxes, increased financial assistance to those in need and new and improved programs.

Fiscal responsibility is not measured by one year's budget performance, nor in mere balancing of the budget. Without being definitive, it implies accountability by the elected representatives and public servants, providing the best and most efficient levels of government services within the capability of individual and business taxpayers to support such services.

You are aware this government has reduced from 17 per cent to 15 per cent its demands upon total income generated in the province and we have an objective to reduce this further to 12 per cent. With our commitment to limiting the provincial government's budget growth to a rate of at least one percentage point less than the growth rate in the economy, we will continue to approach this target. — Evan M. Wolfe, Minister of Finance.

THE GLOBE AND MAIL

The most complex mechanism on the face of the earth is the human brain, and since the only tool we have to understand it is also a human brain, we may come to a sort of intellectual standoff. Still, in the plodding progress toward a grasp of what our grey cells are all about, there is a place for the kind of research being undertaken by a number of psychologists and others into possible differences between the brain functions of males and females.

One line of thought which has been subjected to tests is that there are some things women do better than men, others that men do better than women, and the difference cannot be accounted for solely by the conditioning society imparts to boys and girls; that, in fact, the differences are built in as natural aptitudes.

Among other intriguing possibilities being considered is the idea that in most male brains the areas that control language functions are concentrated on the left side and those dealing with spacial functions on the right, whereas the functions of the female brain are more evenly distributed.

Every package of research information in this field should carry a government health warning to the effect that excessive credence could be dangerous. Lots of people with little taste for clinical objectivity (or anything close to it) will be ready to pounce on each tentative test as proof of the conclusion they had already reached in their own minds.

There will be Archie Bunkers by the thousands, anxious to establish that men are essentially superior to women and that this explains why they occupy most of the important positions in human affairs. And as they come thundering blindly in, they will meet a withering fire from those who are ready, sight unseen, to denounce any theory that there could be fundamental differences between the sexes.

We are certainly not prepared to start forming firm conclusions on the basis of the research that has been done so far, but the notion that male and female thought processes approach a problem in different ways — if it should be established that this is the case — is something we could live with. In the interest of variety, the continuing delight of interaction between the sexes, and escape from the threat of drab uniformity, one might even hope for it.

Extremism in cause of democracy?

By MICHAEL GETLER
Washington Post

HAMBURG — The young and outspoken mayor of Hamburg, Germany's largest city west of Berlin, is emerging as the central figure in a divisive national debate that is testing the dimensions of this country's postwar democracy.

The mayor is Hans-Ulrich Klose, 41, a liberal and controversial Social Democrat. The debate is over the so-called "radicals decree," a 1972 resolution adopted by federal and state governments in the wake of terrorist violence, a measure designed to keep extremists out of West Germany's vast system of public service jobs.

The fear in Germany at the time was that terrorists, once thwarted by the police, would begin what they called the "long march through the institutions" in an effort to subvert the system from within.

In the years since then, the decree and its haphazard application have left scars on many West Germans, especially the young. The federal government virtually has dropped the decree as a discredited approach, but many of the states governed by the conservative opposition have not.

So the debate goes on, stirring deep divisions among those who feel the threat of subversion — especially of the school system by Communist teachers — is real and those, like Klose, who believe the cure is worse than the disease.

"I don't like extremists either," Klose said in an interview in his office here recently. "I consider them to be my political adversaries. Communists as well as neo-Nazis. But I think we are making a mistake when we try and solve the problem by means of administration. The struggle between democrats and non-democrats must be a political struggle in the first instance. We must get used to the fact that a democracy must be a democracy even in the way it handles people who are non-democratic."

Although official statistics have not been available since 1976, it is estimated that, since 1972, 1.5 million West Germans applying for public sector jobs have been investigated by the Federal Office for the Protection of the Constitution, the equivalent of the FBI.

SCHMIDT
. . . ducks debate

The catch has been meagre, with about 1,000 to 2,000 applicants rejected because they failed to meet the test of loyalty to the constitution and to the "free democratic order."

The effect of these security screenings, the fear of stepping out of line politically or in student activities, has had a much broader impact, however, than the number rejected indicates, especially since the German federal and state civil service includes everything from garbage collectors to teachers and government officials.

"My experience in the last six years is that the procedure in handling the problem has gone out of control," Klose said. "It became too perfect in the way that Germans are. When we do things, we do it in a perfect way, be it good or evil."

"It is a question of faith and legitimacy," he said. "When young people start to be afraid of the state and its mechanisms, they get a feeling that everybody is under some kind of control. So they start to hold back when asked for their political opinions or convictions," a reluctance that produces conformity and opportunism, he said.

"In general elections, extremist parties of the left and right get between 1 and 3 per cent of the national vote," he added. "Yet the whole country is running crazy because of this 1 to 3 per cent, and my fear is that, by handling the situation this way, we will actually increase the number of potential voters for extremist parties."

Klose is not the only West German politician to hold such views. Yet he is the most important one for several reasons.

For one thing, very few if any other front-line politicians here, including Chancellor Helmut Schmidt, are personally confronting the issue, although the government and the ruling Social Democratic Party are clearly on record as favoring measures to liberalize the system significantly.

"Schmidt is the best chancellor we could have on financial and economic matters today," said a top Social Democratic Party political figure. That is important because it is under severe economic strain that West Germany would be most vulnerable socially if things went bad, many here believe. "And Schmidt has a feeling for social conflicts between trade unions and entrepreneurs. But he is not a man of internal politics and does not understand that emotional-moral questions are of great political importance too," he said.

Klose, on the other hand, has fought a politically costly battle in the Hamburg parliament to prevent two school teachers with 12 years' experience from being fired because they are Communist Party members.

He warned his party and countrymen in October that it was better to have 20 Communists in public service than 200,000 frightened and intimidated young people in the country.

Although Klose favors doing away with the radicals decree, he is against giving civil service jobs to "anybody who acts or speaks in precise and proven terms against the basic principles of our demoratic order, people who advocate violence or who go into schools to convince students to act against democratic principles.

"You cannot work on the basis of suspicion alone. Membership in a communist party, for example, is not sufficient proof" of such intentions of upheaval, Klose argues.

Yet virtually the entire conservative Christian Democrat and Christian Social Union parties, and indeed a number of Social Democrats, believe it is fundamentally contradictory to be a Communist and swear allegiance to West Germany's constitution.

A Liberal pulls the rug

By DAVID FOLSTER

FREDERICTON — It bears repeating at least once more that New Brunswickers like their politics the way they like their rum — deep and dark. They got a powerful dollop of political potion the other day when Liberal Robert McCready abruptly yielded to the siren song of Conservative Premier Richard Hatfield and agreed to become house speaker for the next legislative session.

A big, raw-boned man who somehow reminds one of John Wayne, McCready has long been known for his independent style. But even those closest to him apparently were startled by this decision, which preemptorily pulled the rug from under his once-cherished Liberal party.

The move eased Hatfield out of a sticky situation created by last fall's historically close New Brunswick election. His Tories were victors by the narrowest of margins — 30 seats to the Liberals' 28 in the 58-seat house — and had the premier been forced to follow custom and pick a speaker from the government side the edge would have been thinned to 29-28.

In those circumstances, barring an agreement with the volatile members of the opposition, the government theoretically would be in danger of defeat every time a couple of cabinet ministers sought succor in Ottawa, or a pair of backbenchers came down with the flu. Now that threat has been lifted somewhat, and McCready's erstwhile Liberal colleagues are apoplectic.

They are considering the matter nothing less than a defection, as it obviously was, although McCready protests otherwise. He insists his move will not be a significant factor in how long the government survives, his reasoning being that a 30 to 27 house margin, which it now becomes, will hardly permit many government members to become ill or develop wanderlust.

But, more to the point, Liberal leader Joseph Z. Daigle had earlier ruled that no Liberal member should help the government out of its predicament by accepting the speaker's job. And, doubtless sensing he had a caucus member with itchy feet, had appointed McCready party House Leader in an obvious attempt to anchor him on the opposition side.

So, when Premier Hatfield notified Daigle of McCready's decision, the Liberals promptly expelled their old friend from the party caucus.

Why then did this man — who not long ago told an interviewer his political credo was "if you do as you'd like to be done by, you won't go too far astray" — risk not only his party's rejection but also the opprobrium of country neighbors in his rural riding of Queens South?

His rationale, as it appeared on the front pages of the province's newspapers, was that he could do more for his constituents as speaker. Having been in opposition before (1970 to 1974), he thought he could have considerably more leverage with the government this way.

But there are also dark hints he can likewise do more for Bob McCready. The speaker, for example, receives more money than ordinary members of the legislative assembly. Moreover, there has been talk of making the speaker a permanent appointment, and with previous experience in the job (1968 to 1970, when the Liberals were in power) and now ensconced there once more, McCready could be a prime candidate.

Oh, what a fall!

LONDON — Do British boobs droop? Do old world noses go unmodified in the United Kingdom? Do we lack up-lift by way of facelift? On the whole, yes. And the reason for it is not, as you might think, the worthiness of the National Health Service; but the sternly unfrivolous attitude of the British doctors to the whole question.

Vanity, vanity, all is vanity, say these lords of our medical upkeep; and they are very unhelpful indeed towards the woman — or even man — who wants to do a bit of home improvement on what his Creator gave him.

A year or two back, a mass circulation women's magazine ran an article on face-lifts; it had 7,000 letters within the next three months asking for an address where they could get one.

Claire Rayner, popular author of the historical novel series The Performers and advice auntie to The Sun, Britain's most successful mass-circulation daily newspaper, scarcely ever talks about cosmetic surgery, but even so 10 per cent of the 40,000 letters a year she has to answer concern the hope of plastic surgery. (She doesn't say which bits seem to need modifying most, but as The Sun has pioneered the nude-from-the-waist-up picture on its third page, I would not be astonished if it was a Silicone Gulch they most wanted to own.)

There are a few clinics — some reputable, some not. There are private doctors who specialize in all this, and they're gathered into an august branch called The British Association of Plastic Surgeons — but they only accredit gents with a consultancy (top doctorhood) in the National Health Service.

And whether you're private or whether you're not, in Britain the convention is that you can never, never, never see a specialist without going through your general practitioner first. (And when you get to the specialist a face-lift can cost up to $3,000 and a nose job between $1,400 and $2,000.)

But what if the local doctor doesn't think your nose needs any attention? Suppose, for example, he has that sort of nose himself?

You can try telling him, perhaps, that a nose like a landing strip looks better on a middle-aged medic than it does on a 20-year-old girl, but what if he is still unsympathetic? Or if the bags under your eyes are still a lot better than the bags under his eyes? Or, even worse, under his [illegible]? Or what if he simply doesn't approve of any medical talent being wasted on such frivolous things?

You simply won't get to the specialist at all, because the reputable ones won't take you without a note from your doctor.

The $64 question, of course, is whether all this does any good. Aren't happy, well-adjusted people perfectly able to cope with a long nose or low-slung frontage? Well yes — but how do you get to be so happy and well-adjusted, if your nose is such that when you get on a bus, a voice from the crowd says "Blimey, here comes Concorde"? How easy is it to forget the slackening of the face and the dragging of the jaw-line, in a madly youth-orientated society like ours?

Claire Rayner says that when she first trained as a nurse, she accepted the orthodox view that people who complained about their noses were actually the victim of deep-seated sexual hang-ups, so it wasn't much good doing anything about the nose.

Now, several hundreds of thousands of letters and many years wiser, she knows a nose is a nose is a problem — and that it can be cured by dealing with what actually seems to be wrong: the nose itself.

One doctor who does a good line in hoisting, tucking, slicing, adapting and taking a [illegible] in league with another doctor in Dusseldorf who does a lot of breast-work for the Fraus and Frauleins. He says that a girl in her twenties can take a good big silicone insert quite well; but that when she gets to her thirties, she'd better have it changed.

His words seemed the epitome of the whole sad problem: "At thirty," he says, "they have to change from a semi-circle to a tear-drop."

Oh vain tears, vain tear-drop, don't we all — but if one can nail the leaves back on the trees even for a little while, we can keep the autumn at bay. Well, the British say autumn, of course: but the Americans use a better word — for years, for October, for leaves from the trees and for what happens to your bosom: they just say "fall".

Federal SC Splits in Two For Next Vote

OTTAWA (CP) — The Social Credit party will divide itself along linguistic lines for the next federal election and operate separate campaigns, Charles-Arthur Gauthier, interim leader, said Monday.

The party has still not chosen leaders for the French-language campaign in Quebec and the English-language campaign elsewhere.

"We will be two parallel groups operating two campaigns," Gauthier said at a news conference.

That will result in fewer problems, he said, apparently referring to feuds between the party's two linguistic groups during the last two decades.

However, the two groups will campaign for the same principles, Gauthier said laughing.

The party became leaderless last month when Lorne Reznowski, a Winnipeg English literature professor, resigned to make way for a leader from Quebec.

Fabien Roy, leader of the Party National Popular in the Quebec national assembly, has been offered the job as Quebec leader by the party's nine-member parliamentary caucus.

Roy, a former Creditiste MNA, says he will not decide whether to switch to the federal arena until after a series of meetings with party membersthroughout the province, which he expected would take at least a month.

Reactor Report News to Ottawa

OTTAWA (CP) — The federal government has not jumped into the international nuclear fusion reactor research game even though the United States and the Soviet Union may want to build one in Canada, says an external affairs department spokesman.

He said the government has not been approached, despite news reports that the United States and the Soviet Union may construct a joint, experimental fusion reactor near Varrenes, Que., and that the British Columbia government would like to see such a facility built in B.C.

"It is in the interests of every province to say: 'Keep us in the picture,' " the spokesman said. "But we (Ottawa) have not yet been approached by the International Atomic Energy Control Agency."

News reports Monday quoted B.C. Science and Technology Minister Pat McGeer as saying the "largest international scientific venture ever undertaken" could cost as much as $100 million a year to operate and that the B.C. wants the $1 billion fusion reactor.

Unlike conventional fission reactors which split uranium atoms apart to create energy, fusion reactors would theoretically join hydrogen atoms together to produce energy.

Huge amounts of electric power and magnetic force are needed to fuse the hydrogen isotopes which are gleaned from water.

If ever successful, fusion reactors could produce enough safe — virtually radioactive-free — energy to fuel the entire world.

One of the greatest problems facing fusion researchers is that of maintaining the enormous temperatures and pressures required during fusion.

A Montreal newspaper dispatch from Ottawa Saturday said a research station may be built in Canada or Finland as part of the soon-to-be-concluded Strategic Arms Limitation Treaty (SALT).

The report said the project may be built at Varrenes, already the site of a high-voltage research station, near Montreal.

Hydro Quebec, the provincial power utility, has been pushing the the National research Council to finance a small experimental reactor there.

It said announcement of the project — code-named Tokamak, in honor of Princeton University's Tokamak experimental fusion reaction chamber — has been delayed owing to possible opposition in the U.S. Congress.

The Princeton project is often called the Princeton Torus, after the doughnut-shaped cowling of the reaction chamber.

There have been no reported comments from the U.S.S.R., the mother of the Tokamak device, on the possible joint fusion experiment.

Reports have indicated that aside from the U.S. and the USSR, Japan and China may be interested in participating in the project.

Most Passenger Cars Have Tires Too Low

OTTAWA (CP) — The transport department says 60 per cent of all passenger vehicles have inadequate air in their tires.

Department interviewers learned that 75 per cent of drivers knew what their tire pressures should be, "yet 57 per cent of vehicles with radial tires and 60 per cent with non-radials had under-inflation problems."

The department said it also is looking into the feasibility of a device to warn drivers that tire pressures have fallen to an unsafe level.

Inadequate air in tires increases the risk of tire damage, ruptures, blowouts, tread separations and increases tire wear and gas consumption.

Pension Plea Spurned

OTTAWA (CP) — Esquimalt-Saanich MP Donald Munro Monday accused Ottawa of a "breach of trust" because some retired members of the armed forces are not getting full pension benefits.

However, the pleas of Munro, other Tory MPs and New Democratic Party House Leader Stanley Knowles that something be done about the situation were to no avail. Their request was turned down by Liberal Leonard Hopkins of Renfrew North-Nipissing East in Ontario, who acted as the government spokesman in the Commons debate.

Conservative Michael Forrestall of Dartmouth-Halifax East told the Commons numerous soldiers are inadvertently retiring a day or two short of a full 27 or 28 years service. This means they must wait one year to receive their full pension benefits.

The mistake in calculating the soldiers' length of service sometimes is made by the defence department — possibly deliberately, he said.

'Put Off Metric Madness'

OTTAWA (FP) — Postmaster-General Gilles Lamontagne has been urged to delay the implementing the metric system in the postal service and improve rural mail service.

"Put off the metric madness" was the plea voiced in the Commons by Walter Dinsdale (PC—Brandon-Souris), a former postmaster-general.

Dinsdale noted that, on the eve of the general election, the government was introducing door-to-door delivery in suburban areas which had been under a "freeze" since 1974.

Now the funds have been made available for restoring door-to-door service to citizens in urban areas, the postmaster general should halt the installation of the costly metric system in the post office, Dinsdale said. In that way funds could be available to remove the current freeze on rural mail delivery service.

Why's P.O. Using Courier In Capilano?

OTTAWA (CP) — Ron Huntington (PC—Capilano) asked Postmaster-General Gilles Lamontagne Monday why the government used a courier service, instead of the postal service, to deliver application forms for Young Canada Works projects to his riding.

Did the government's use of an expensive courier service instead of the postal service constitute an "official condemnation" of the post office?

Lamontagne said the post office continues to improve in spite of stiff new competition from private courier services and "depressing questions from the opposition."

Skagway Oil Pipeline Rapped by U.S. Officials

JUNEAU (AP) — A proposed Skagway oil pipeline might lead to tankers weaving through 300 fishing boats, and potential oil slicks affecting Glacier Bay National Monument, sea life, tourism and wilderness areas, witnesses testified Monday.

The proposed 1,136-kilometre pipeline into Canada drew largely negative reaction at a U.S. bureau of land management public hearing. The hearing is the 14th held in several U.S. states on various pipelines proposed to move crude oil from Valdez, Alaska, to the U.S. states to the south.

Fishermen, conservation groups and the U.S. National Park Service questioned whether huge tankers could safely reach a pipeline terminal at Skagway and not disrupt the area's $13 million-plus annual fishing catch.

A spokesman for Foothills Pipeline Ltd., a Calgary-based consortium, defended his firm's plans. Biologist John Watton said the line's benefits hopefully outweigh its environmental risks.

The pipeline would be laid through the Yukon, northern B.C., Alberta and Saskatchewan.

William Sage, a spokesman for Northern Tier Pipeline Co., argued that his firm's proposed line — from the Olympic peninsula in Washington state to Minnesota — was superior to other alternatives.

Leonard Steinberg, executive director of the Southeast Alaska Conservation Council, called the Skagway plan "a complete absurdity" for its round-about method of tranporting oil from the trans-Alaska pipeline terminus at Valdez to Canada.

He said tanker traffic and resulting oil spills might have harsh effects on fishing, tourism and proposed wilderness areas.

Foothills officials have cited possible long-term Prudhoe Bay production drops as a roadblock to an overland pipeline hooking directly to the trans-Alaska pipeline. They also said the Skagway pipeline would be partially supplied by tankers carrying foreign oil.

Dan Kuehn, national parks service spokesman, said currents and severe weather might push oil spills into the Glacier Bay National Monument. Oil slicks and the large tankers themselves might affect animal and sea life, he said.

A spokesman for the United Southeast Alaska Gillnetters said up to 300 gillnet boats, each trailing a net more than one-quarter a kilometre long, fish up and down Lynn Canal, the stretch of inland water leading to Skagway.

The 120,000-ton tankers would have to navigate through the fishermen and face winds that jump to 96 kilometres an hour, he said.

Under those conditions, cleaning up an oil spill would be close to impossible, he said.

Duchess Leaves Hospital After Surgery

PARIS (Reuter) — The Duchess of Windsor has left hospital after undergoing intestinal surgery, her lawyer said today.

Lawyer Suzanne Blum said the 82-year-old duchess left the American Hospital Monday by ambulance for her 25-room home on the outskirts of Paris.

Asked about her condition, Mrs. Blum said: "She is recovering. Her health is as good as ean be hoped."

Doctors at the hospital in suburban Neuilly operated on the duchess Feb. 24 to remove a benign intestinal blockage.

Smit Silenced By Hired Killers?

JOHANNESBURG (AP) — A South African newspaper says an economist who knew too much about the illegal financing of secret government propaganda projects abroad was murdered 16 months ago by two hired West German mercenaries.

The Star says the information about the unsolved deaths of the economist, Dr. Robert Smit, and his wife came from a former pilot for South African Airways who told his story to J. F. Ludorf, a former judge of the Transvaal province Supreme Court.

The newspaper did not identify the pilot.

Smit and his wife, both in their 40s, were shot and stabbed at their home about 50 kilometres east of Johannesburg on Nov. 23, 1977, while he was campaigning for a seat in Parliament.

Smit at the time was rumored to possess information about currency manipulations to finance secret government projects abroad costing millions of dollars to improve South Africa's international image.

The scandal attracted little attention for almost a year, then blew up when the government fired the director of its information department, Eschel Rhoodie.

Rhoodie now is somewhere in Europe. The Johannesburg Sunday Times reported last weekend that he has made a tape recording saying that the secret operations included contributions to the election campaigns of some U.S. politicians, including possibly to a presidential candidate. None of the politicians was named, but the U.S. House of Representatives ethics committee is investigating the report.

The Star says Ludorf told it the pilot told him two West Germans who had fought in the Congo as mercenaries were paid $35,700 each to kill Smit and his wife. The former judge said he has information that the killers were flown from Luton Airport near London to Lanseria Airport, near Roodepoort, South Africa, and "returned to London in the same aircraft before dawn the following day."

Ludorf refused to say who paid the killers, the newspaper says, but he said he has documents to back up the pilot's story and statements from witnesses who heard discussions of the events he reported. He said the South African police have questioned the man, and he will testify before a government commission investigating the propaganda scandal, the Star says.

Payoffs By S.A. Probed In U.S.

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House of Representatives ethics committee is looking into allegations that U.S. politicians accepted money as part of a campaign by South Africa to buy influence in the United States.

Representative Charles Bennett (Dem. Fla.), committee chairman, emphasized that the inquiry, under way for several days, is in a preliminary stage.

"We have been looking into the matter," Bennett said Monday.

He said no U.S. House members have been identified so far as having accepted any money from the South African government.

Nonetheless, Bennett said in a telephone interview the ethics committee staff had begun an investigation before stories about the allegations appeared during the weekend in South Africa.

A spokesman for the Senate ethics committee, Lynn Murphy, said newspaper reports of the South African allegations have been collected, but no decision has been made on whether to conduct an inquiry into whether members of the Senate were involved.

The Johannesburg Sunday Times reported that money allegedly went to "pro-South Africa" candidates, including possibly a U.S. presidential candidate.

The newspaper mentioned no names of recipients of money allegedly funnelled from a secret South African government account to the election campaigns of U.S. politicians.

Much of the money was spent between 1973 and 1976, previous reports said.

Weekend Ban No Gas Saver?

WASHINGTON (WP) — An internal Energy Department study concludes that one of four emergency conservation plans sent to Congress March 1 — a ban on weekend gasoline sales — would result in longer service station lines the rest of the week and save little gas.

"Weekend closings don't automatically reduce consumption," said Vivek Basrur, an economic consultant with Resource Planning Association Inc., of Cambridge, Mass., which conducted the study. "The queueing phenomenon could increase gasoline consumption," he added in a telephone intervieww.

The study says that setting a "minimum purchase re[illegible] is the most effective means of reducing service station lines and would waste far less gas than would weekend closings.

DOE officials, including Deputy Secretary John F. O'Leary, stress that their estimates of potential savings from weekend closings are tentative.

Monday on Capitol Hill, the administration's standby conservation measures drew sharp criticism from House and Senate energy committees. In addition to weekend closings, DOE has proposed mandatory temperature settings of 80 and 65 degrees, depending on the season; a ban on decorative lighting and gas rationing by coupon.

O'Leary told a House Commerce subcommittee that the nation could face a "significant shortfall" in gas supplies by the end of April.

Healing Substance: Shrinks Piles

Exclusive healing substance prove[illegible]rhoids and repair damaged tissue.

A renowned research institute has found a unique healing substance with the ability to shrink hemorrhoids painlessly. It relieves itching and discomfort in minutes and speeds up healing of the injured, inflamed tissue.

In case after case, while gently relieving pain, actual reduction (shrinkage) took place.

Most important of all—results were so thorough that this improvement was maintained over a period of many months.

All this was accomplished with a healing substance (Bio-Dyne) which quickly helps heal injured cells and stimulates growth of new tissue.

Now Bio-Dyne is offered in ointment and suppository form called Preparation H. Ask for it at all drug stores. Satisfaction or your money refunded.

Children Attack Their Parents In One of 10 U.S. Families

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) — Teen-aged children in one out of 10 families in the United States hit, beat, stab or shoot their parents, says a survey released Monday by a University of Rhode Island sociologist.

And most of the teen-agers who beat their parents were beaten themselves as smaller children, said Richard Gelles, the sociologist.

"It just shows that violence begets violence," Gelles said. "You learn how to use violence in the family. You learn it's okay to use violence against the people you love."

He said his research shows there are 4.7 million U.S. families in which at least one parent is the victim of physical violence by a child.

"It could be more. We have a very conservative estimate and we haven't even included one-parent families which we know are under more stress."

Gelles based his estimate on interviews with 2,100 families in different parts of the country.

Of those, 1,100 families had children aged three to 17 living at home, and in 110 of those families, one or more children "used a fairly dangerous form of violence" at least once a year on their parents, he said.

Gelles' statistics are not broken down by age, but he said the overwhelming majority of children attacking their parents are teen-agers. "They've got to wait until they're big enough to fight back."

Gelles plans to publish his findings in a book called Behind Closed Doors: Violence in the American Family to be released in September.

Neither the FBI nor the U.S. Association of Medical Examiners has compiled statistics on the number of parents killed by their children each year, but Gelles estimates that the figure is 1,500 to 2,000.

today's markets

Toronto

TORONTO (CP) — The Toronto stock market advanced fractionally in active mid-afternoon trading today.

Sigma Mines (Quebec) Ltd. gained ⅛ to $39⅛ following a brief halt at mid-session for news that the company plans a two-for-one stock split, subject to shareholders' approval on April 27.

A trading halt continued in shares of Steintron International Electronics Ltd. at the company's request pending an announcement. The stock last traded at $5⅜.

The Ontario Securities Commission said it ordered a trading ban in Kappa Investments Ltd. for failure to make statutory findings. A hearing will be held April 3.

The commission also continued a cease-trading order of March 6 in Canuc Mines Ltd. pending the company making required filings.

Among industrials, Dome Petroleum rose 1½ to $124½, Biltmore Industries ⅞ to $6, Andres Wines A ¾ to $15¼, Controlled Foods ¾ to $6½ and Versatile Cornat ¾ to $13⅝.

And while the market has gained much of its power in recent days from rising oil-company stocks, those issues were hindered today, analysts said, by lack of indication of what President Carter and his top aides decided at their Camp David meeting Monday to do about crude oil deregulation.

Among the oil issues, Exxon rose ¼ to $54, Texaco dipped ¼ to $26⅜, Standard Oil of Indiana dropped ¼ to $60⅝, Gulf Oil slipped ¼ to $26¾ and Atlantic Richfield fell ¾ to $61⅞.

New York

NEW YORK (AP) — Stock prices slipped slightly today, with analysts attributing the drop to fears of further Federal Reserve Board credit tightening.

Montreal

MONTREAL (CP) — Prices dropped slightly in moderate afternoon trading on the Montreal Stock Exchange, with the composite index falling 0.17 at 245.58. Volume was 394,203 compared with the 473,898 shares traded up to the same time Monday. CP Ltd declined ⅛ at $27⅞, Inco ¼ at $23¾, Stelco A ⅛ at $29⅞, Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce ⅛ at $26⅞ and BC Telephone one cent at $18.

London

LONDON (Reuter) — The London stock market fell moderately near the close of trading. The Financial Times index was down 2.6 to 507.1. Industrials were lower while mining shares moved narrowly as the bullion price edged higher. Canadian shares eased.

VANCOUVER

VANCOUVER (CP) — Prices were down in moderately active trading today on the Vancouver Stock Exchange. Volume to 10:53 a.m. PST was 1,184,562 shares.

In the industrials, International Ionarc was unchanged at .28 on 1,885 shares and Canadian Javelin was unchanged at $1.30 on 1,552.

On the resource and development board, Transcolt Resources was down .02 at $1.08 on 37,600 shares and Kandahar Resources was unchanged at .68 on 34,500.

Levi Eyes Probe Of BCSC

The NDP watchdog on the government data processing system wants the parameters of the Crown Corporations Committee expanded so it can investigate provincial computer services.

Norman Levi (Vancouver-Burrard) has been critical in recent weeks of the operation of the B.C. Systems Corp. (BCSC), and Monday he demanded the Crown corporations committee be empowered to look into it.

The multi-party committee is restricted to delving into specific Crown corporations such as Hydro, ferries and Insurance Corporation of B.C.

But Levi says other corporations such as B.C. Systems, B.C. Buildings and the B.C. Resources Investment Corp. should be placed within investigative powers of the committee.

Levi, one of four NDPers on the 15-member committee, says the legislature is specifically forbidden from looking into the operations of the three Crown corporations.

One incident Levi would like to investigate is the hiring of a consultant to serve as acting vice-president of finance and administration for BCSC.

Golf Course Okayed 6:1

Oak Bay council re-affirmed its support Monday night for a par 3 golf course in Henderson Park woods despite opposition from immediate residents.

In a 6-to-1 vote, with only Mayor Brian Smith opposed, council upheld its decision of last fall provided the municipality receives senior government grants to add to a private legacy for capital costs.

And aldermen made it clear they will demand that the Parks and Recreation Commission operate the course on a break-even or profit basis.

Ald. Neil Swainson said the golf course, which would occupy three of the 10 wooded acres in the 27-acre park, will not proceed unless government grants are received.

He also said operating costs must be met by fees.

He said parking problems on Henderson Road are nothing to do with the proposal and a council committee is looking at extra parking.

Ald. Doug Watts said it was a question of local interest versus general interest and a park is not an extension of a neighbor's back garden.

Ald. Peter Bunn said construction costs must not exceed the legacy and government grants and operating costs must be met by user charges, otherwise it should be leased out or returned to a park.

Smith said he opposed cutting down trees in a public park and added there is no groundswell of public support for the course.

"I can't find anyone who is wildly enthusiastic about the scheme except the parks commission and my colleagues on council, God bless them all," he said.

"I don't see how we are going to generate revenue to pay for it. We are going to be accused of being recreationally reckless. I think we are going to lose credibility."

In other business, council voted to give aldermen a pay raise of 5.83 per cent to $3,600 a year and the mayor a 4.04 per cent raise to $8,100 a year.

Two aldermen, Swainson and Norm Pimlott, voted against the raise saying the aldermen's increase exceeded the provincial government guideline of five per cent.

Mayor Won't Meet Shelford

Two Saanich aldermen were delegated by council Monday night to ask Agriculture Minister Cyril Shelford for provincial help in establishing a buffer zone around Fatt's Poultry Farm in the North Quadra area.

Aldermen Howard Sturrock and Geoff Vantreight were given the job after Mayor Mel Couvelier bluntly refused to meet with the minister.

The meeting was proposed by Ald. John Mika during discussion of correspondence between Shelford and Couvelier on the conflict between the poultry farm operation and the surrounding residential area.

The minister said in a March 14 letter he could not support the mayor's contention that the onus was on owner Richard Fatt to acquire land for buffer purposes.

Shelford said Saanich should have implemented the agriculture ministry's so-called Green Zone technique on separation distances to prevent the subdivision and development of the property immediately south of the farm.

"I am of the opinion that the protection and continuing existence of Fatt's Poultry Farm enterprise is the principal responsibility of Saanich municipality in concert with Mr. and Mrs. Fatt," Shelford added.

In his reply to the letter, Couvelier says council has tried strenuously to acquire an economically-priced buffer strip for the farming operation, its only stipulation being that the owners contribute to the financial solution.

But the family turned down the municipality's most recent offer. Instead, the Fatts suggested Saanich acquire the adjacent lands at market-value residential prices, down-zone them to agricultural use and re-sell to them "at some unstated agricultural value," Couvelier says.

With reference to the Green Zone standards, Couvelier says ministry officials have indicated the technique is purely experimental and should not be generally adopted by municipalities at this stage.

In any case, he points out, the suggested formulas indicate that for a farm the size of the Fatt operation there should be 800 feet separation between farm buildings and residential properties.

"This would likely entail the public expenditure of over $1 million based on present land values," Couvelier's letter adds.

He also notes that former Municipal Affairs Minister Hugh Curtis turned down Saanich's request for a development cost charge to be levied against the North Quadra residential subdivision. That charge would have provided the buffer land with the cost being borne by the entire subdivision.

When Mika suggested the meeting with Shelford, Couvelier refused to act as council's representative.

"Have an alderman do it," he replied. "If you want to run around and stall for another couple of months don't include me in the exercise. I'll be sick that day."

Deadlock Foils Saanich Move

A proposal that Saanich withdraw its membership in the Federation of Canadian Municipalities (FCM) will have to wait until there's a full turnout of council members to vote on the motion.

That was agreed by council Monday night after a deadlocked 4-4 vote on the pull-out recommendation from the finance and legislative committee.

Opposed to ending membership in the national federation were aldermen Howard Sturrock, Geoff Vantreight, David Paterson and Fred Severson. The absentee was Ald. Sandy Noel.

This year's FCM dues for Saanich amount to $2,651.

Two proponents of relinquishing membership, Mayor Mel Couvelier and Ald. John Mika, earlier told the finance committee they see little tangible benefit for the municipality from its involvement with the organization.

Judge-Only Trial Granted

The second of 13 men accused of conspiracy to import marijuana last summer near Tofino was granted a judge-alone trial Monday.

Lino Colatosti, 36, also known as Allen Valenti, of Qualicum Beach, had earlier chosen trial by judge and jury.

County court Judge Peter Millward, over the objection of the prosecution, granted his re-election to trial by judge alone. The matter was then adjourned to June 13 to set the trial date.

Earlier, Melville Douglas Balfour, 31, of Lasqueti Island re-elected trial by judge alone and his case will be heard in county court Aug. 20.

Trial of the remaining 11 persons has been set for April 2 before a judge and jury. The case is expected to last five weeks and hear from 50 prosecution witnesses.

The men are charged with conspiracy to import 13 tons of marijuana said to be worth $20.8 million wholesale.

Before The Judge

Judge Gilbert Hogg committed a 46-year-old Oak Bay woman for trial on a charge of theft over $200 following a preliminary hearing in Victoria provincial court Monday.

Laurel Patricia Way, 284 Beach Drive, is charged with theft of $18,000 from the Yates and Broad streets branch of the Toronto-Dominion Bank between April 1, 1974, and June 1, 1978.

Two men were charged separately with possession of marijuana for the purpose of trafficking following weekend arrests in Oak Bay.

Judge Fred Green released 25-year-old Dennis James Jackson, 1078 Gosper, and 24-year-old Charles Michael Verne, 2080 Milton, on their own recognizance in the sum of $2,500 and remanded them until next Monday for election of trial method.

A 23-year-old who stole a wallet from the Bay on March 5 was handed a 30-day jail term.

Geoffrey Anthony Green, who gave an address on Craigflower, pleaded guilty to theft under $200.

A 31-year-old man who ate a meal Sunday night at the Keg 'n' Cleaver Restaurant, 500 Fort, and left without paying was given a three-day jail sentence.

Thaddahes Karabanik, of the Salvation Army hostel, pleaded guilty to obtaining food by fraud and was handed the jail term by Green.

Mulligan said Karabanik and a companion ordered a $43.50 meal about 6 p.m., ate it and left without paying.

Green also placed Karabanik on one-month's probation and ordered him to pay the restaurant $21.75 within the month.

A 17-year-old who was drunk at the James Bay Community School, 140 Oswego, on March 6 was fined $25, placed on three months' probation and ordered to abstain from alcohol during probation.

Michael Roycroft, 430 Wain, pleaded guilty to causing a disturbance in a public place by being drunk.

Judge Harold Alder committed a Saanich couple and a Vancouver man for trial following a five-day preliminary hearing.

Alexander Seivewright, 51, and Marie Seivewright, 52, both of 4124 Cabot Place, and Harry Lloyd Clarkson, 55, of 8575 Heather in Vancouver, were charged with defrauding the federal government of almost $28,000.

The two men are also jointly charged with conspiracy to defraud the Department of Regional and Economic Expansion (DREE) of about $27,900, Seivewright with two counts of accepting benefits for himself and his wife from Clarkson and Sunshine Coast Charters, and Clarkson with two counts of giving benefits to the Seivewrights illegally.

Mrs. Seivewright is charged with possession of $1,000 from alleged transactions.

Despite the fact it was a 56-year-old Sidney man's seventh conviction for drinking-driving offences in six years, Green handed out a minimal $50 fine but reiterated previous three-year probation and prohibition orders not to own or drive a car.

Royden Robert Scribner, 2300 Beacon, pleaded guilty to impaired driving and hit-and-run and was fined $50 on each count.

Crown counsel Richard Law said Scribner was heading south on the Trans-Canada Highway and his car was noted to be weaving. Scribner crossed over a double-solid line, sideswiped an oncoming vehicle and failed to stop, Law stated.

Green said that the record and circumstances would ordinarily call for a prison sentence but described it as a unique case after hearing from defence lawyer John Hills, who said his client was progressing extremely well in the Miracle Valley rehabilitative program for alcoholics.

John Douglas Morrell, 40, of 388 Selica, was fined $350 for having care or control of a vehicle while having a blood-alcohol content over .08.

Unbeaten Rinks Tangle in Canadian Junior Curling

Big Crunch Arrives Early

By BILL WALKER,
Times Staff

The first big crunch in the Canadian junior men's curling championship at Victoria Curling Club wasn't long in coming.

It happened this morning with the four undefeated rinks from Monday's first two draws — defending champion Alberta, Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Newfoundland — meeting head on. And if that doesn't help put things in order, another meeting of the "big four" is scheduled for Wednesday at 2:30 p.m.

Defending champion Darren Fish of Alberta, Mert Thompsett of Manitoba, Warren Proctor of Saskatchewan and Geoff Cunningham of Newfoundland each won two games.

But two had to fall this morning, as Proctor went against Fish and Thompsett against Cunningham. Wednesday, it's Thompsett against Proctor and Fish against Cunningham. And, barring the unforeseen, these early matchups of the favorites could go a long way towards deciding the championship.

As it was Monday, following the colorful opening ceremonies, Fish had no trouble in his opener, disposing of Mike Moss of Yukon-Northwest Territories 9-1, but things were much tougher in the second before he got by Dave St. Louis of Northern Ontario, 6-3.

With the score 4-1 for Fish, St. Louis got the defending champion in deep trouble in the eighth end, but couldn't land him.

With skip rocks to come, St. Louis had four rocks in play and shot rock behind cover in the four foot. On his first rock, Fish was heavy attempting to draw to shot rock. But St. Louis was also heavy giving Fish another chance. This time Fish stayed in the back eight foot for second shot leaving St. Louis what appeared to be the same shot he had played earlier for a takeout and stick to count five.

However, the sweepers may have been too eager — third Jeff McKnight tried in vain to call them off — and St. Louis' rock was just wide enough to only nudge the Fish stone and he had to settle for two rather than five.

Manitoba was the handiest winner of all. Thompsett breezed by Nova Scotia's Paul Chisholm 14-1 in the opener as Chisholm's rink could do nothing right, and then, continuing his solid display, took care of Philip Gilks of New Brunswick 8-2 at night.

"Nothing fancy," said Thompsett, "we went out to play a conservative game . . . keep things clear . . . wait for the breaks . . . and take it from there." Which is what they did, and well, too.

The thriller of the night was Proctor's 2-1 victory over Peter Jenkins of Prince Edward Island as drama, joy and heartbreak played their parts.

Proctor was fortunate to survive as he won it with a steal of one in the 10th end. Seven ends were blanked in the game, Jenkins taking the first point in the third and Proctor getting his in the eighth when he stuck while trying to hit and roll out. In between and around those two points it was knockout at his best.

In the 10th, Jenkins missed his first rock when he tried to remove a Proctor stone from in front of the house. But he hit his own shot rock and stuck in the four foot, forcing Proctor to make a clutch draw. Proctor did, to the four-foot behind cover. Jenkins couldn't match it, was wide and Proctor had won his second game. Earlier Proctor had defeated Stacey Coomber of B.C. 8-2 in the first draw.

Cunningham was a 12-4 winner over Ontario in the opener and stole a single point in the 10th end with a draw to the four-foot to defeat Denis Marchand of Quebec 8-7 in his second game. (See story on Newfoundland).

Marchand ended the day, 1-1, having scored three in the ninth and stolen two in the 10th to defeat New Brunswick 10-7 on the first draw. Ontario also split its opening games, Rizzo handing Moss of Yukon-Northwest Territories his second defeat, 10-5.

St. Louis won his opening game against Prince Edward Island 7-2, highlighted by a steal of four in the ninth end when Jenkins was light with a draw.

Nova Scotia rebounded from its humiliation in the opener against Manitoba to hand Coomber his second defeat, 8-4.

Ontario, Northern Ontario, Nova Scotia and Quebec were tied with 1-1 marks while the Territories, P.E.I. New Brunswick and B.C. were winless.

The championship continues through until Saturday.

Martin Undefeated After Five Games

VERNON (CP) — Flora Martin of Victoria was finding the competition easier than expected at the Canadian senior women's curling championships as she picked up her fifth straight victory Monday with a 9-4 win over Alice Crawford of Calgary.

Martin, who won the national title in 1974 and 1975, has a 5-0 record while Dorothy McKenzie of Winnipeg moved into second place with a 4-1 mark as she trounced Beverley Reber of Whitehorse 12-4 in nine ends.

"I really expected Alberta to be tougher," said Martin, who posted a 13-1 victory over Reber in Monday's fourth draw. "Every team here is tough but it is nice to get Alberta out of the way."

In other fifth-draw action, Fern Seel of Moose Jaw, Sask., edged Gwen Gibson of Quebec City 11-10 in 11 ends, Jennie Boomhower of Charlottetown doubled Doreen Blair of Fredericton 10-5, and Carmel McGrory of St. John's recorded her first victory by downing Dorothy Robeson of Truro, N.S. 13-3.

Gibson needed an extra end to defeat McGrory 9-8 in the fourth round. In other games, McKenzie defeated Seel 9-5, Robeson got by Blair 8-5 while Crawford downed Beardsley 10-6.

PRINCE GEORGE (CP) — Bob Widdis' Ontario rink had the only undefeated record after four rounds of the Canadian mixed curling championships, and Widdis said Monday that experience is the reason why.

Ontario defeated Nova Scotia's Lowell Goulden 6-5 and Manitoba's Brian White 7-4 Monday to move into sole possession of first place.

Widdis, from Etobicoke, Ont., finished tied for fourth last year in the Canadian final at Saskatoon, but the experience gained is playing a major role this time.

Ontario was tied with Northern Ontario's Roy Lund of Dryden after the third round, but New Brunswick's Brian Mackin knocked off the Northern Ontario foursome 8-5 in the [illegible] round.

Alberta lost its first two games, but was most impressive in defeating Quebec's Andre Turgeon 10-2 in eight ends and Nova Scotia 10-4 in nine ends.

Saskatchewan moved into a tie for second with Northern Ontario by defeating Manitoba 5-4 and British Columbia's Ivan Carlisle 9-5.

Carlisle is 2-2. The championship ends Friday.

PERTH, Scotland (CP) — Canada's Lindsay Sparkes of Vancouver kept her rink in contention for the first world women's curling championship today with a 12-5 win over Switzerland.

Victory left the Canadians with a 3-1 record after five rounds. Sweden, meanwhile, joined the unbeaten United States rink at 4-0 by defeating Norway 7-3 while Scotland, 4-1, trounced Italy 13-2. The American drew a bye.

In other fifth-round matches, West Germany beat England 14-6 and France edged Denmark 7-5.

Sparkes lost to Brigitta Torn of Sweden 9-3 Monday when Torn stole five points in the victory.

Newfoundland Rink Brought Own Fans

By BILL WALKER
Times Staff

It was Newfoundland against the prairies as the 21st annual Canadian junior men's curling championship entered its second day at the Victoria Curling Club today.

And the Newfoundland rink, skipped by Geoff Cunningham, was holding its own nicely and doing well both on and off the ice.

The St. John's rink won its first two games Monday, the first a relatively easy 12-4 triumph over Nick Rizzo of Ontario and the second a tight 8-7 cliffhanger victory over Denis Marchand of Quebec with a steal of one in the 10th end.

And Cunningham and his rink have the credentials to go with their record. He is in his third national final and was mate (third) for Jeff Thomas last year at Charlottetown when Newfoundland finished third with an 8-3 record.

Three of the players — Cunningham, third Derek Benson and lead Rob Thomas — have been together for four years. Second John Allen joined the rink this year after being runner-up several times in club junior competitions. "I guess you can say if you can't beat 'em, join 'em," he said.

For all the rink but Allen it is their first visit to Victoria. He was here with the Newfoundland junior golf team for the Canadian junior championship at Gorge Vale in 1975.

Curling fans may recognize the Thomas name. If they don't they should file it away for future reference.

"For one day," says Newfoundland provincial delegate Ewart Tibb, "you may see an all-Thomas rink in the Brier."

And here's why.

Jeff Thomas, who skipped the junior rink last year, won a Brier berth for Newfoundland this year. His older brother Ken threw lead rocks and is coach of the Newfoundland junior team here. Rob is the lead for Cunningham while there is another Thomas youngster on the way up.

That's on the ice. Off the ice, the Newfoundland team has support as well. Cunningham's parents, George and Elizabeth, made the long trip west. So did the Thomases, Gordon and Muriel, who are fresh from the Brier and you can't root two sons along and not another, can you? Harry Benson, father of Derek, is the other parent ready to hopefully cheer on a winner.

And just to be sure they could see all the action, (and, having come as far as they did, who is to complain?) the two moms "borrowed" the best media seats in the house to watch Cunningham make a draw to the button behind cover with his last rock to beat Quebec.

Earlier, Cunningham, who likes to throw big weight and is usually very accurate, almost had that type of game backfire. Facing two Quebec rocks in the eighth end he went for a double, fanned, leaving Marchand a free draw for three. He then had to get two in the ninth to draw even.

Tibb, obviously prejudiced but nonetheless confident, predicted a finish in the first three for the Newfoundland rink on his arrival here Sunday; and right now the rink is making him look good and not looking too bad itself.

Confident Rookie Ready To Settle Down in NHL

BOSTON (AP) — Rookie Dwight Foster appears ready to settle down here.

"I think I have a knack for scoring," the Kitchener, Ont., native said Monday night after producing two first-period goals and an assist in the Bruins' 4-3 victory over Toronto Maple Leafs in the lone National Hockey League game.

"I think I can be one of the best scorers in the National Hockey League," he added.

The 22-year-old rookie scored his fifth and sixth goals in the opening period to raise his point total to 12 in 35 Bruins' games, sandwiched around three trips to Rochester of the American Hockey League.

"I'm finally getting the playing time, and the big difference is that you are not hesitant," he said. "You're not thinking that the next shift could be your last."

Despite jumping out to a 4-1 first-period lead, the Bruins had their hands full as the Leafs made a concerted effort to tie the game — missing by inches in the dying seconds of the game.

With goaltender Mike Palmateer on the bench in favor of an extra skater, Toronto captain Darryl Sittler broke in alone on Bruins netminder Gerry Cheevers, only to have his backhand glance of the side of the net as the final buzzer sounded.

Wayne Cashman put Boston ahead 1-0 as he beat Palmateer with a 25-foot slapshot at 7:15 of the opening period, but Ron Ellis tied it on a rebound five minutes later.

Foster then fired in a backhander from the left of the crease and followed with a 15-footer from the slot for a 3-1 Boston lead.

Terry O'Reilly made it 4-1, cashing a rebound off Rick Middleton, who had broken in alone on Palmateer.

Governors Tackle Alignment Problems

GUEST SPEAKER at second annual Victoria Cougars' awards dinner is Western Hockey League president Ed Chynoweth (above). Tickets for event, to be held Wednesday at Leonardo Da Vinci Hall, are available at Cougar office in Imperial Inn.

Governors of the Western Hockey League were labporing in Calgary today in an attempt to sort out some alignment problems.

The troubles sprouted from the recent sale of Edmonton Oil Kings to a Portland group, which plans to move the team to Great [illegible] Montana.

Such a move poses a number of difficulties involving scheduling and travel arrangements for a league plan to revert to a two-division setup from the present three-division arrangement.

Meanwhile, Victoria Cougars are busy preparing for a three-games-in-five-nights stint to close out their regular season.

They open against Seattle Breakers tonight at 8 p.m. in Memorial Arena, visit Winter Hawks in Portland on Friday and return home to finish off against Medicine Hat Tigers on Saturday.

Tickets for the first round of playoffs will go on sale tonight at Memorial Arena.

In the lone Monday game, Brandon Wheat Kings rallied for a 6-5 decision over Oil Kings in a tussle that ended in a bench-clearing melee at Edmonton.

Don Dietrich's goal at 18:26 of the third period gave Brandon its 57th victory of the season.

With the loss the Oil Kings missed the opportunity to wrap up the third and last playoff berth in the Eastern Division.

Rocks May Be Busier

It appears probable that Victoria Shamrocks will be playing more games during the upcoming Western Lacrosse Association season.

Wally Donaldson of Vancouver, the new league commissioner, has announced an increase in the season to 30 games for each of the five clubs under an unbalanced schedule.

Under the new format, the two Vancouver Island teams — Shamrocks and Nanaimo Timbermen — would play each other 12 times while the other squads — Coquitlam Adanacs, New Westminster Salmonbellies and Vancover Burrards — would play each other nine times.

The 12-week season will open May 2 with Coquitlam at Vancouver and Nanaimo at Victoria. New Westminster opens at home to Vancouver on May 3 and the season wraps up Aug. 1.

Victoria president Fred Wooster said the Shamrocks will go along with the increase in games, providing Memorial Arena is available.

"We have until Wednesday night to approve the schedule and as the other four clubs are strongly in favor of more games, we'll go along," he explained.

"We have 12 Wednes[illegible] two Mondays and one [illegible]day tentatively booke[illegible] there's a cha[illegible] Nanaimo's games will be played at the new arena in Duncan. Sharmocks and Nanaimo are negotiating to play an exhibition game April 28 in Duncan."

Canuck President Resigns

VANCOUVER (CP) — Bill Hughes resigned Thursday as president of Vancouver Hockey Club Ltd., operator of the National Hockey League Canucks.

Hughes, who had represented the club on the NHL board of governors since 1974, cited personal reasons for his decision. Canucks chairman Frank Griffiths will represent the team at league meetings until a replacement for Hughes is chosen.

"For some time, I have wanted to retire and spend more time on my personal affairs, but did not feel I could do so until the Canucks appeared to be on the move," Hughes said Monday.

"This year, for the first time, I believe we can see some light.

Speaking of Bad Breaks; Did You Hear About Bill?

Bill Wakeham won't be winning any golf tournaments for a while. The Cowichan professional suffered a hairline fracture of a wrist bone in an accidental fall at the Cowichan Racquet Club on Sunday.

The cast went on Monday morning and the Chopper won't be swinging a club for at least four weeks.

The mishap settled Wakeham's indecision about entering the CFAX Vancouver Island Open tournament this year.

The Island Open starts April 8 with the qualifying round at Glen Meadows.

And looking ahead to the five-week, match-play tournament, Dave Mick and professional Cec Ferguson as being touted as the golfers to beat. Fergie has been working on his game, but the word from Colwood is "watch out for the amateur."

Mick is bubbling with enthusiasm and has set up a strong schedule for the summer. He wants to make the Willingdon Cup team and, even at this stage of the season, that lays his chances in the "good bet" category.

It helps to know, of course, that Mick and partner Ron Howard, Jr., picked off the open buttons at the weekend. Their 3-and-2 victory over Dave Donaldson and Grant Milliken put an end to a seven-week reign by the Gorge Vale combination. Mick and Howard capitalized on a good start because every hole after the eighth was halved.

The Island Cup matches for the Francis Winspear Trophy will be held for a sixth straight year, and isn't it about time the Victoria District Committee and/or the Vancouver Island PGA offered some official recognition towards the cause?

Originated by Al Zimmerman when the former tour professional made his home here for a few years, the matches help stir great interest in all Island tournaments. Points accumulated from various tournaments determine the makeup of the 10-man teams that represent amateurs against professionals in the two-day playoff for the Winspear Trophy.

Because of Winspear's enthusiastic sponsorship, the matches are self-sustaining, and do much to further interest in Island events.

At any rate, the points will be doled out again and a list of "designated" events will be along shortly.

Not Nightclub Act, Lemon Tells Kuhn

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Baseball commissioner Bowie Kuhn advised major league teams Monday to discontinue the occasional practice of fielding no-name teams in preseason games.

"We are again being advised that at times, representative squads are not being produced for exhibition games at which admission is charged," Kuhn said in a telegram to all teams. "This is not fair to the fans and should be discontinued. Please advise your managers."

New York Yankees manager Bob Lemon, advised of the message, had a blunt response.

"I'm not going to kill my club trying to entertain people during spring training," he said after the Yankees had defeated Atlanta Braves 2-1 with a lineup of substitutes.

"This might be our opening-day lineup . . . who knows?" said Lemon.

New York played without outfielders Reggie Jackson and Mickey Rivers — both suffering from minor leg ailments — and first baseman Chris Chambliss, who has a wrist problem.

"It (spring training) is not like a nightclub act," said Lemon. "You shouldn't have to play their favorite songs.

"This is the first road game down here Reggie has missed in three years," continued Lemon. "All the commissioner has to do is look at our spring-training lineups and he'll see that everybody who has been able to play has played. If he doesn't agree, tell him to come down here and look at the rubbing tables in our trainer's room.

"There's no sense bringing the kids to spring training if you're not going to play them," he added.

Yankees president Al Rosen agreed with his manager.

"I'd like to satisfy them (the fans), too, but when you've got the nagging injuries we've had, you can't play those people," he said. "I know there are fans in Florida who want to see our stars. Maybe they're retired and they're from New York and this is the only chance they get to see the New York Yankees.

"I can understand their disappointment, but our main obligation is to the New York fans. It would not be fair to them to bring a banged-up team to New York."

SPEC Smells a Rat In Roberts Bank Plan

VANCOUVER (CP) — A government report on the expansion of Robert Banks coal port would allow the port to triple in size without public hearings despite environmental dangers, according to environmentalist Cliff Stainsby.

Stainsby, executive director of the Scientific Pollution and Environmental Control Society, said federal Environment Minister Len Marchand was being cynical when he said Friday the government wants to protect the area.

The Roberts Bank port, located about 20 kilometres south of here, now is 20 hectares (about 50 acres) but the report, released Friday, would allow expansion by another 10 hectares, said Stainsby.

Marchand said Friday he had recommended rejection of a full-scale expansion of 110 hectares as proposed by the federal National Harbors Board.

The report said, however, that a smaller expansion [illegible] proposed by the board could be permitted with minimum adverse impact on the environment if recommended procedures were followed. It added that a new environmental impact study would not be required.

Stainsby complained that if the government accepts the view that a new impact study is not needed, the opponents of expansion would not be able to respond to a smaller project.

Workers Return

CHETWYND (CP) — Workers at a natural gas plant near this northeastern British Columbia community returned to work Monday after problems with the plant's water supply sparked a weekend work stoppage.

About 300 men, members of various unions working at the Dillingham-Delta Pine River gas plant, left their jobs Saturday because poor water pressure meant they could not shower or clean up after work.

Truck Fingered

VANCOUVER (CP) — A truck owned by Placer Development Ltd. was surrounded by pickets here Monday — one day after a tractor-trailer unit allegedly was driven through a picket line at Endako Mines in Fraser Lake, injuring three mine workers.

Members of Local 17 of the Canadian Association of Industrial, Mechanical and Allied Workers, who are on strike at the mine site, claim the truck here is the same one that ran through the picket line.

BCR Report Delay

PRINCE GEORGE (CP) — Release of a report on wage disparities on the British Columbia Railway has been delayed until a further inquiry can be held into company complaints of a lack of information and commission bias.

Dr. Simon Strand of Simon Fraser University was to have handed in his report last Friday.

Liden Nominated

DELTA (CP) — Carl Liden, former New Democratic Party MLA for Delta, has been nominated by the party to run in that riding in the next provincial election.

Liden was defeated in the 1975 election by current Social Credit MLA Walter Davidson.

Stevens Applauds Give-Away

KAMLOOPS (CP) — Premier Bill Bennett has found a federal MP who agrees with his new program of free distribution of shares in the B.C. Resources Investment Corp.

Sinclair Stevens (PC — York-Simcoe) told a service club Monday that Bennett's plan of distributing five free shares in the provincial Crown corporation to citizens of B.C. is "ingenious and it's something we should look at in Ottawa."

The Progressive Conservative finance critic said the B.C. program might be a way of divesting the federal government of its many Crown corporations.

Stevens told 250 people there is room to reduce the number of federal Crown corporations as a means of cutting back on the size of government in Ottawa.

Justice Violated By H Program?

VANCOUVER (CP) — The Canadian Bar Association will submit a formal report to Attorney General Garde Gardom protesting the British Columbia government's compulsory heroin treatment program, which it says violates the fundamentals of justice.

Last fall, the association criticized wide powers given police to arrest suspected heroin addicts. The government amended the legislation to allow a judge to be involved in the arrest procedure.

Stephen Gill, who is preparing the formal report, said there are many other aspects in the act which the association feels violate the fundamentals of justice.

The association is particularly upset, he said, with the present emphasis in arrest which puts the onus on the person arrested to prove he is not addicted and the fact that doctors play no role in assessing the length of compulsory treatment.

Will Rudy Become the New Pinball Wizard?

By VERNON SCOTT
United Press International

HOLLYWOOD — Rudy Durand devoted 11 years of his life to the production of a single motion picture which, against the longest possible odds, will see the light of day next month.

For more than a decade Durand was identified in Hollywood as "that nut" trying to finance a script titled Tilt and to make it into a movie.

The story involves a 14-year-old girl pinball champion who takes on a Minnesota Fats-type character in a big-money pinball playoff to help a young singer-composer friend finance a demonstration record.

The script didn't sound promising. Nor did Durand, who had never produced nor directed a major movie, elicit great confidence in financial backers.

At the start Durand was dismissed as a joke. Eventually he became a pariah after finding backers on two different occasions only to have the money men drop out, stranding him high and dry, ruining his reputation.

Durand sold his home, lived in his automobile, ran up $400,000 in debts and lost his friends all in tenacious pursuit of his dream.

An intense, sensitive man of Corsican extraction, Durand had experience as a money raiser for other movie producers and in the recording business.

But he became obsessed with the idea of Tilt in 1968 and despite ridicule, false starts and heart-breaking double crosses by "friends" and strangers alike, he persisted against incalculable odds.

No matter what Tilt does as a movie — which stars young Brooke Shields and Charles Durning — one doubts if the scenario packs as much drama as Durand's personal story of the underdog finally prevailing over the system.

"Nobody knows what rejection is until they've gone through what I've been through," Durand said without apparent bitterness.

"After the first four years I'd had six different writers and six different screenplays. An ex-agent claimed he owned the script. We spent three weeks in court. I finally established clear authorship, my own, to 189 pages of script.

"Even so I'd lost my credibility in Hollywood. The script and I were both tainted. I managed to make a deal with a production company and I hired a crew.

"The company, with headquarters in Texas, went out of business. That's when I sold my house and borrowed to the hilt to pay off the crew — which legally I didn't have to do."

Soon after, a group of New York investors put up some money. Again Durand hired a crew. Again the deal collapsed. Durand made good a second time but only after he was almost a half-million dollars in debt.

The worst was still to come. Two years ago last Christmas a friend loaned him $5,000 to fly to New York to look for new investors. It was Christmas Eve when Durand was told by the hotel cashier that his pal's cheque had bounced.

The management called the cops and Durand escaped a jail cell Yuletide only by floating a last-minute loan.

Over the years Durand could have bailed himself out by selling his script. Two years ago producer Alan Pakula offered him $500,000 for it. NBC proffered $100,000.

"I turned them all down because I wanted to direct the picture and have full artistic control," Durand said. "Everyone thought I was crazy. When they heard about the kind of money I was refusing, I couldn't even borrow money."

Then — and here there should be a blare of trumpets — enter financier Mel Simon of Indianapolis, an investor in independent films. He had read Durand's script and was interested.

"Mel called me in New York when I was about to return to Hollywood," Durand said. "I thought he might be just another hustler. But he asked me to take a flight that would stop at Indianapolis and we'd talk in the airport.

"I had nothing to lose. We had our meeting and I told him about the false starts, my debts, no credit and being a laughing stock at the studios. Mel Simon gave me $5,000 cash and shook hands on a $3.5 million deal.

"He said he remembered his early struggles when he was broke and nobody had faith in him. He also gave me complete control of the picture."

Durand did all the casting, directing, editing and even the scoring. He designed a special pinball machine at a cost of $27,000 and stands to get rich in partnership with Simon to fill orders for 30,000 such machines for pinball parlors around the country.

Tilt is a reality and will be distributed by Warner Bros. Durand even had a hand in setting up the deal with the studio.

Whether Tilt succeeds is almost immaterial. Durand, of course, has faith that it will. And faith is what Rudy Durand is all about.

BACK IN ACTION following a back ailment is actress Diana Rigg, photographed here as she returned to work in Tom Stoppard's Night and Day in London, Monday.

U.S. to Block Flights?

fares came from Air Canada and CP Air. Canadian officials suspended the proposals after the Canadian carriers objected.

"It's beyond me how they can deny the low-fare proposals of U.S. carriers that should have been in effect today if they're now going to ask that Canadian airlines have the same privilege for their flights into the United States," the CAB official commented.

In Montreal, Air Canada spokesman Marie-Josee Bourgeois said she could not comment on what action Air Canada might take if the Canadian regulatory agency does reject the fare cuts on flights to the United States. "But some discussions have already taken place" among airline officials, she acknowledged.

"We'll have to wait and see what the reaction of the (Canadian) government is. The dispute is at the regulatory level and not the commercial level."

Thousands of Canadians are already booked on various carriers — including American airlines — for flights between March 27 and May 7, the experimental period during which the cuts will be in effect.

hensive settlement in the Middle East."

Khalil said: "As for the Palestinian question, the Camp David accord clearly stipulates the necessity of solving the question from all its aspects, thus taking into consideration the legal rights of the Palestinians. It is along this principle that they will decide their future."

Begin planned to leave Friday for Washington to sign the treaty, and Al Ahram, the semi-official Egyptian newspaper, said Egyptian President Anwar Sadat will leave Saturday. The signing at the White House is expected Monday.

Al Ahram said Sadat will spend five days in the United States, then return to Egypt to submit the treaty to the 360-member National Assembly for ratification.

In Washington, Defence Ministers Ezer Weizman of Israel and Kamal Hasan Ali of Egypt were unable to agree on when Israel will give up the offshore Sinai oil fields, the last issue in their negotiation of a timetable for Israel's withdrawal from the Sinai. But both said they are confident the dispute can be resolved before Monday.

Hundreds of right-wing religious settlers, meanwhile, demonstrated against the treaty today.

An Israeli defence ministry source said an order was not immediately given to evict the settlers but it was expected the army would force them to leave, as it has done with other illegal settlers in the past.

In a related development, Saudi Arabia says it will support Arab summit resolutions condemning the treaty, raising the possibility that the oil kingdom will join in economic sanctions against Egypt.

TOWN TALK

Recent media coverage concerning the Nanaimo "Diefenbunker" has John Blake wondering if it's time the federal government officially made public its existence.

Blake, head of the federal emergency planning department for the Pacific region, says it's ludicrous for the government to pretend it's a top secret thing when it appears everyone has known of its existence since the day it opened in 1963.

The general secretary of the B.C. Government Employees' Union leadership is thinking big these days.

The BCGEU, in its plan to improve its image and educate the public as to what the union is all about, is currently spending about $100,000 on a series of ads on individual BCGEU members and their jobs.

John Fryer, obviously pleased by the response to the ads, now is talking about organized labor getting its message across as an entity. How best to do it ?

Well, while some within labor think the best bet would be for the B.C. Federation of Labor to put out its own weekly or daily newspaper, Fryer is hanging in for a labor-owned radio station.

Some consultants have apparently said a sum of $500,000 or so should do it and Fryer feels labor wouldn't have too much trouble coming up with that kind of cash.

The new satellite television coverage of the House of Commons debate is going over well with cable subscribers now able to compare what they see on their screens with what they read in their newspapers that day.

Cable 10 audiences have reacted favorably, program director Bruce Lowther said.

Programs come in by satellite and are of better quality than the previous taped debates, which were broadcast the following day.

Permission to use the communications satellite was granted to the CBC for a network covering 15 major Canadian cities for a 30-day test period.

Lowther said he expects the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission to renew the arrangement following the parliamentary summer recess.

Some people are, as they say in the credit trade, "slow pay." But it's not always their fault.

Take the case of a classified ad customer at our paper who hadn't paid a bill for $10.20. His payment finally came in this week in an envelope postmarked July 16, 1975.

Where had it been for almost four years? That's one of those questions the Canada post office hates to be asked.

The Plantarium is blooming well still in business.

Last week a Times story said the company was one of four that had gone out of business since the Shopping Spree coupon book hit the streets.

Not so, says plant store manager Gary Delo. Indeed, he says, things have never looked greener.

The confusion arose out of the fact the company moved from the basement of the Commerce Mall at View and Douglas to a new street-level site at 1692 Douglas, not far from the Bay, while the article was being prepared.

Incidentally, Delo says he's honored thousands of the coupons for free plants over the months and will continue to do so until the offer expires April 30.

'It's a Way of Making Justice Work Better'

By AB KENT
Times Staff

A boy of 16, a 28-year-old woman and a 24-year-old man paid their dues in a select Victoria group last year and happily let their membership lapse.

Each had broken the law and been convicted, respectively, for theft, impaired driving and pointing a pellet gun.

Each was sentenced to donate spells ranging from 24 to 60 hours of labor in community service as part of their punishment.

These three performed their community service sentences in praiseworthy fashion and because of the salutary effect of the experience will probably never show in court again.

They were among 493 individuals ordered by Greater Victoria courts in 1978 to a perform a total of 31,857 hours of unpaid work under the Community Service Order program of the corrections branch.

"It's one way of making the criminal justice system work better," says Graham Ross-Smith, director of the program for Vancouver Island.

"It definitely benefits the younger people. They are made aware that they have to live up to their obligations," said youth worker Laurie Smith, who has supervised many hundreds of hours of community service orders.

Repeaters are rare, which is some indication of its effectiveness.

But those who muff their first chance by committing another offence before their order expires, or renege on their allotted hours of work are unlikely to be considered a second time.

Ross-Smith said an offender who completes an order satisfactorily and fulfils any other condition of probation may be eligible for the program if he subsequently commits another offence.

Community service officer Will McGaghey, who joined the branch last April, said repeaters are infrequent: "I've only had two since I've been here."

On the other hand, he knows of four cases where the CSO experience led to full-time employment.

Police, who generally have little involvement with the program, are aware of the public benefits.

Community relations officer Sgt. John Maybin of Victoria police thinks compensation to the victims of crime is one of the desireable aspects of the CSO program.

A judge may order some form of reparation in cases where an injury or property damage is caused.

"I think it has some merit in making the criminal realize the injury he has caused to a victim or the community, and one way of paying for it," Maybin said.

"The individual is paying, not the community. It's on his back, not on our pocketbook."

About 50 institutions or agencies in Greater Victoria are drawn upon as community service resources which can benefit from the hours of free labor assigned by a court.

They include Cool-Aid, the Salvation Army, the Oak Bay recreation centre, the Native Friendship Centre, the SPCA, the George Pearkes clinic and Harbor Lights.

The 16-year-old mentioned earlier was convicted of theft under $50 and was ordered to do 24 hours of general maintenance work supervised by the rec centre staff.

His performance sheet rated him as a good worker.

The impaired woman driver did 150 hours of janitorial duty for the Salvation Army, which was pleased with her work.

The man who pointed the gun was assigned to 60 hours of duty and also did a good job — when he showed up.

But a 17-year-old male given 200 hours of community service at the Christmas Hill nature centre after conviction for several break-ins and thefts performed only 19 hours before committing another theft.

He was referred back to his probation officer and was to be charged with breach of probation.

An offender serves time on the end of a paint brush

Laurie Smith of Cool-Aid said CSOs are a good alternative to jamming the jails.

"It's good for us. We get jobs done like maintenance and upkeep on the building, janitorial work, some trades like carpentry."

Ross-Smith said not all victims of crimes want the perpetrator to repair damage or perform a service. Some, especially old age pensioners, want nothing more to do with the culprit.

Ross-Smith says so far, trade unions have wanted to co-operate in the CSO program. He finds they consider it part of their obligation to society although it could be argued the donated hours take potential jobs away from union members.

Out of the 31,857 hours of community service work ordered in Greater Victoria last year, 27,454 hours were completed, which Ross-Smith considers a high proportion.

Only 74 of the 493 cases were complete failures, Ross-Smith said.

He calculates each hour donated to be worth $3, for a total in the Greater Victoria area last year of $82,362.

Grouse Nest Appeal Vetoed

Hasaam Kamil has lost his battle to retain ownership of his luxurious Grouse Nest estate at East Sooke.

The Supreme Court of Canada Monday refused to hear a petition by Kamil and his wife Lenore for an appeal on a B.C. Court of Appeals decision.

The 560-acre waterfront property is now expected to fall into the hands of Laurel Properties Ltd. of Vancouver.

Ken Yule, a Vancouver lawyer representing the firm, said today an injunction obtained last week preventing sheriff's officers from serving a writ of possession has been dissolved by mutual consent.

The Kamils bought the property 18 years ago with the intention of converting the place into a luxury resort. The resort opened in 1964 but closed two years later.

In March, 1976 the Kamils obtained a $1.35 million mortgage from Laurel Properties. The mortgage, at 24 per cent interest, came due a year later. But no payments were ever made.

The company obtained an order from the B.C. Supreme Court last June to seize the property. The Kamils appealed but their application was turned down by the B.C. Court of Appeals in September.

More Students Flooding Market for Summer Work

By AL FORREST
Times Staff

Competition for student jobs will be a little tougher this year, Youth Employment Centre manager Susan Vallor said today.

"There will be a few more jobs but there will be more students looking for them," she said.

In addition, students are better prepared than in the past for the job-hunting process and they know about dressing well and preparing resumes.

"This makes it harder for those who don't prepare for the job search. Remember, being qualified doesn't guarantee that you will be hired. Employers hire only the best qualified people," Vallor said.

The Youth Employment Centre at 2653 Douglas will open May 1 to handle the rush of student job-hunters.

First jobs available will be for waiters, waitresses and other hospitality industry jobs as well as some office positions and a few government positions. Later in the summer some casual garden work will become available.

The centre helps find summer jobs for anyone returning to school in the fall. Those looking for permanent work should apply at the main Canada Employment Centre, 810 Fort.

The Youth Employment Centre placed 1,500 students in jobs last summer out of 6,000 who applied.

The totals in both categories will be slightly higher this year, Vallor said.

She suggests students begin now by preparing their resumes and, if possible, discussing job-hunting with their school counsellors.

In addition, they should start an independent search for jobs through friends and relatives.

"Above all, students should be aware of the importance of first impressions. Some young people enquire about jobs dressed in blue jeans and they think they will dress up when they come back for the interview. But by then it's too late. Employers always judge by first impressions and too often the student isn't invited back for an interview. They've alredy blown it."

In addition to the federal Youth Employment Centre, there is a youth job-hunting office run on a year-around basis by the provincial government at 808 Douglas. Many of these jobs are permanent but some casual work is available.

Young people are advised to apply at both offices.

County Gov't Eyed by B.C.

B.C. is looking into the county system of government favored by U.S. states and some Canadian provinces, Municipal Affairs Minister Bill Vander Zalm said today.

The minister said ministry officials are looking at county governments in Washington, Oregon, Alberta and Ontario to see if any aspects of their systems can be adapted for use in B.C.

"What we are attempting to accomplish in part is a reduction in government and a reduction in bureaucracy," the minister said.

A county system in a few areas of Alberta has done away with school boards, hospital boards and regional boards, Vander Zalm said.

They have all been combined into a county government consisting of an elected body, headed by a reeve and with county members on the board.

Walkway Link Proposed

Central Saanich council is considering a proposal to construct a 1½-mile walkway joining the municipality's two major communities of Brentwood and Saanichton.

Municipal clerk Fred Durrand said today the walkway would have the dual purpose of providing greater protection for children walking to and from school and a better pathway for horse-riding.

Sympathy from Pickup On CUPE Job Stand

Greater Victoria school board chairman Carol Pickup said today she sympathizes with the Canadian Union of Public Employees opposition to a provincially-funded summer student job program.

"I'm not completely out of sympathy with part of the union's position," Pickup said.

She said she understands CUPE's reluctance to endorse the creation of 40 jobs in the district for students when permanent staff have been laid off during the last few years.

"They almost see this as a further slap in the face," Pickup said.

CUPE local 947 president Helen Bell said Monday the union will not allow a ministry of labor-funded Youth Employment Program to take place in the district unless the students receive union wages.

Union scale starts at $5.13 an hour, but the maximum wage provided under the program is $3.20 an hour.

Pickup said the situation is indicative of the bad labor relations climate locally and in other parts of Canada.

If the school district had better relations with its employees, the program would probably go ahead, she charged.

"But people see it (the youth employment program) as a direct threat to their own permanent jobs."

Trustees Adopt Policy of Regular Homework

By LORRAINE LOCHERTY
Times Staff

A back-to-the-basics trend in education was reinforced Monday night when Greater Victoria school trustees voted to make regular homework official board policy.

The board spent 50 minutes debating the merits of homework before passing a motion by Trustee Susan Brice.

Brice said she received complaints from parents because there are no district-wide guidelines for assigning homework.

Some parents feel students receive too much homework, others thought they weren't getting enough and it's time the board took a stand on the issue, she said.

In a motion that paraphrases the Public Schools Act regulations, Brice said that homework is a necessary component of the education system and should be given in increasing amounts as students advance through the grades.

Homework assignments strenthen the day's classroom intruction and encourage good study habits, Brice said in support of the motion.

Schools superintendent Allan Stables will have the job of making sure the board's new policy is carried out. The homework policies of each school will be decided during meetings between Stables and staff and parents.

Stables, however, cautioned trustees not to "make rules you can't carry through."

He said the logistics of enforcing such a policy would be difficult and during an earlier discussion commented it would have little effect on the school system.

Brice said she doesn't expect changes overnight, but believes the new homework regulations will tighten up the system and give parents and students confidence a clearly defined board policy exists.

The homework policy was opposed by chairman Carol Pickup, who said it infringes on the rights of teachers to develop their own guidelines.

Pickup was without supporters John Young, Win Mott and Mary Breer, who were absent from the meeting.

The motion was solidly backed by trustee Peter York, who said it is time the district took a firm postion on the homework issue.

PSA regulations state that "homework shall contribute to the education growth" of students and set out maximum time limits for assignments in elementary, junior and senior secondaries.

Homework limits of one-half hour at the primary level, one hour in junior high school and two hours for senior high students are stipulated in the act.

Hit by Car, Boy, 4, Fair

A four-year-old boy is in fair condition in Royal Jubilee Hospital today with injuries he received when struck by a car in the 9900-block Resthaven, Sidney, Monday.

Deiter Pawluk received internal and head injuries in the mishap at 3:25 p.m.

Sidney RCMP are withholding the name of the driver of the car pending the outcome of their investigation.

Tight Skirt Guide

TORONTO (CP) — Sitting or standing, the skinny skirts for spring are going to look terrible if women don't learn how to walk and sit in a more graceful way, says a top Toronto model.

The full, bulky skirts women have been wearing have given them so much freedom of movement, says Yanka, that "you could cross one leg up over the other with a wide skirt and boots and get away with it."

"But you can't do that with a tight skirt and look ladylike.

"A tight skirt needs a slit on the side, front or back to enable you to walk," she said in a recent interview.

"Thigh-high slits that show a lot of leg are for evening. Slits for daytime are not as accentuated.

"If you sit down and cross your legs, make sure that your skirt is long enough to cover your knees. Shorter lengths are fashionable for spring so if there is less length, avoid crossing your knees.

"You'll look attractive if you sit gracefully, not slouched or bored looking and cross your ankles."

Yanka said a woman should "look reasonably composed."

"And don't be blatant about drawing attention to the slit or legs — the fact that the slit is there is enough."

Head Start To the '40s

By BERNADINE MORRIS
Times

PARIS — The tight, small, close-to-the-head hairdo has been replaced by loose page-boys and long hair loosely waved at the ends. The miniature disk hat perched on one side of the head has been replaced by big-brimmed, tilted styles.

Ribbon bows, feathers and other ornaments appear in the hair and the hats are frequently swathed in veiling.

All this is part of the 1940s feeling that pervades the spring and summer couture collections here.

It is worth noting that despite the emphasis on hats in recent collections, albeit the miniature variety, few of them have been seen on people, either at the shows or around Paris. Perhaps they'll fare better in the spring. Miniature hats are still seen in the collections, but they tend to look absurd.

While hats have not made it, high-heeled shoes have. There are fewer boots around on people, but even they have high heels. It would be too much for French women to turn their backs on fashion completely. They are not yet that liberated.

Pumps, often open-toed, have supplanted the ubiquitous sandal in the showings, though the barer shoes still exist, often in multicolor strips. Occasionally, seamed stockings are worn.

There's plenty of accessories news in the collections. Kid gloves are back, for day as well as night. They sometimes look silly, but sometimes they are amusing, as when Per Spook picks up the lemon yellow of a blouse in lemon-color gloves.

Marc Bohan at Christian Dior makes accessories essential when, for example, he cinches in a loose, flaring jacket with a leather sash so it looks [illegible]. He uses a lot of leather sashes. He also introduces an octagonal stiff leather handbag with his daytime clothes. It hangs from a shoulder strap and because of the broad, padded shoulders, it doesn't slip off.

An enamelled triangle-shaped pin is attached to hats as well as pinned to the shoulder of dresses and suits at Dior. Sometimes it is hung around the neck on a chain.

Stockings come in for their share of attention, too. Besides the seamed ones, there are stockings with a black band up the side at Dior and, at Ungaro, with rhinestones up the back, where the seam should be.

Jean-Louis Scherrer is also partial to accessories. He uses black satin gloves as well as the usual leather ones, encases the hair in snoods, which can be outlined in sequins, and favors open-toe pumps, as does Gerard Pipart of Nina Ricci. His favorite pin is heart-shaped and he likes rhinestone bracelets, too.

Big shawls have pretty much evaporated, but Yves Saint Laurent introduces a different kind of scarf. It's oblong, usually in chiffon, and he's so fond of it he drapes two together around the neck. Navy and white, for intance, with a navy suit. Or two pale neutrals, like taupe with beige. Sometimes he ties a couple of scarves around the wrist. There can also be a rhinestone bracelet nesting along with them. That's how he builds up the drama for his one-shoulder black jersey sheaths. Who knows where it will all lead? Maybe to scarves pulled through rings on the finger, as in the 1930s.

But the double scarf as neckwear seems destined for a more immediate fashion role. It has a lot to do with softening the effect of the many tailored suits he shows. As a result, the suits never look too tough, even though the style is mannish. It's another case of the accessory helping the look along.

Early U.S. Suffragette Wins Her Place on Dollar

elizabeth forbes

Several months ago, I told you about a controversy going on quietly in the United States, around whose face should appear on a new dollar coin to be put in circulation.

Women's rights supporters were urging that the image of early suffragette Susan B. Anthony be used.

On the other hand Miss Liberty not only had the nod from treasury secretary Michael Blumenthal but the weight of tradition on her side.

Well, the women's rights supporters won!

In early February, at the San Francisco assay office, history was made, not only as the first Susan B. Anthony dollars were struck, but also because those coins were the first to bear the likeness of an American woman.

In the next few months more than five hundred million worth of the copper-nickel coins (only a little larger than a 25 cent piece), all bearing the stern Anthony profile, will be produced at the three United States mints — San Francisco, Denver, and Philadelphia.

Susan Anthony was the daughter of a Massachusetts Quaker.

He taught her to believe that men and women are equal before God and she devoted her life to making men and women equal before the law.

The notion that women should not be allowed to vote was a downright mockery as far as she was concerned and during the 1872 presidential election she registered and voted.

She was arrested for illegally casting that ballot and fined $100, which she refused to pay — and never did pay.

At the time of her death, in 1906, only four states had granted women the franchise.

Nevertheless, Susan Anthony still believed that failure was impossible and almost to her last breath she was urging her fellow suffragettes to continue the fight.

Outreach Programs — Coming closer to home, you may remember that back in January I told you the Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of women (ACSW) was urging regional and national Canada employment and immigration commission review boards to continue funding women's Outreach projects.

It was pointed out that the federal government was threatening to cut Outreach financing at a time when unemployment for women is twice as high as it is for men; when salary differentials between men and women are widening and when more and more women must work outside the home to protect family incomes from falling below the poverty line.

This unease regarding possible change in Outreach programming has been expressed, it now appears, not only by the ACSW but by many organizations and individuals.

Bud Cullen, federal minister of employment and immigration recently decided to give his side of the story, in an effort to set the record straight.

In a statement issued around the end of February, he includes background information on Outreach projects.

He reminds us that Outreach was created in 1972 as a supplementary tool to improve the employability and access to employment of individuals experiencing special difficulties entering the labor market and who are also unable to benefit from regular manpower services.

Outreach, he argues, responds to the needs of women included in the following groups: People experiencing serious difficulty entering or re-entering the labor force; people in isolated or remote communities; native people; the chronically unemployed; the mentally and physicaly handicapped and inmates and ex-inmates.

Many of the Women's Outreach projects were started in 1975 during International Women's Year.

And because the normal duration for funding is three-and-a-half years, many of the projects are coming to the end of their funding period.

There has been no attempt to cut off funding for these projects any sooner than their contract stipulates, Cullen insists.

He also says all Outreach projects, including those aimed at women, are being thoroughly reviewed before any final decision is taken.

"We deeply regret the misunderstanding of our policies and programs on women's employment," he says.

"I would like to take this opportunity to assure Canadians that women's employment opportunities are a prime concern and we are doing our utmost to ensure all women have the opportunity to fully realize their potential in the labor market."

dear abby

DEAR ABBY: I just saw you on the Phil Donahue show and I can't believe you were born in 1918.

Have you ever had a face-lift?

If not, please tell me how to keep from growing old.

ANOTHER 1918 MODEL

DEAR MODEL: I've never had a face lift. And to keep from growing old — die young.

DEAR ABBY: I read with great interest the letter from the lady who couldn't warm up to her daughter-in-law. (She said, "I always felt that my son could have done a lot better." I wonder if she ever realized that he also could have done a lot worse?)

I, too, felt that my son could have done a lot better, but I wasn't very good at concealing my feelings. I always found something to criticize my daughter-in-law for.

I soon noticed that my son would always take her part, and it was them against me. That's when I began to analyze my own feelings and had to admit that the fault was with me — not her.

That was seven years ago. Thank heaven I woke up in time to improve the relationship before it was too late. When I warmed up to her, she quickly warmed up to me. I have two beautiful grandchildren now, and I am closer to my son than I've ever been.

Abby, edit this in any way you wish, but please tell mothers-in-law to make the first move in reaching out to their daughters-in-law. They will be pleasantly surprised.

JUST IN TIME

DEAR JUST: No editing necessary. You said it very well. Thanks for some horse sense straight from the horse's mouth.

DEAR ABBY: In response to the dieter who finds it tough to turn down dessert-pushing hostesses, may I offer the following solution:

When the insistent hostess brings on the dessert, simply say, "Sorry, I'm allergic to it." Then add, "It makes me break out in fat!"

WEIGHT WATCHER

DEAR WATCHER: Thanks for a timely reminder to take off those extra five pounds we put on over the holidays. I've already done it, which entitled me to the "no-belly prize."

DEAR ABBY: I never thought I'd be writing, but after yesterday's column I felt compelled to do so.

My heart goes out to EASY IN ST. LOUIS. Tell her she is not alone in her fight for sexual sanity.

I, too, was raped by a relative when I was a teenager. I spent the next five years searching desperately for love through numerous brief sexual encounters. I felt cheap and dirty and was convinced that no one could love or want me.

Then I met a very special young man who convinced me that God loved me just the way I was, and that I was precious in His sight. I then let go of my burdensome past, and by accepting God's forgiveness, I started on the long road to forgiving myself.

It works. Believe me. Sign me . . .

TV May Be Making Children too Interested in Objects

MONTREAL (CP) — Television advertising may be making children "more materialistic, more interested in objects than in social interaction," says McGill University professor Marvin Goldberg.

Advertising may also generate potential conflict situations between children and their parents when, for example, the child asks for a toy the parent does not want him to have.

The management professor, who earlier this month appeared before Federal Trade Commission hearings in Washington to explain his findings on advertising directed at children, maintains it is up to television to clean up abuses in this area.

"If you tell a child he can't watch television at all when all his friends do so, that can have difficult social consequences for the child," he said during an interview in his university office.

"But neither can a parent — especially a working mother — be expected to monitor all the television the child watches."

Goldberg said a study he carried out here recently with children in several day-care centres indicated that toy commercials can rob parents of their prerogative to guide their children to the toys they see as appropriate.

He explained when the children were shown an advertisement for a toy and then asked whether they would choose that toy or a ball their mother liked, only about 40 per cent said they would prefer the ball.

In contrast, 78 per cent of the children who had not been influenced by seeing the toy commercial went along with their mother's preference.

Given a choice between playing with a toy and playing with their friends in a sandbox, 70 per cent of children in a control group chose to play with their friends.

But after seeing the toy commercial, only 40 per cent preferred to play with their friends, the rest choosing to play alone with the toy. Goldberg said this indicated these four- and five-years-olds were being encouraged to place a higher value on objects than on social interaction.

And children who had seen the toy commercial and were given a hypothetical situation in which a boy was told he couldn't have the toy, seemed to project more unhappiness on the boy than did those who had not seen the advertisement.

Goldberg concluded: "While one might speculate that children's exposure to TV commercials may increase the likelihood that they will prefer products different from those preferred by their parents, they may not necessarily react more negatively to the parent who denies their request for a product."

Youth Clinic

Young readers' questions on human relations and sex are answered by a panel of experts: Saul Levine, psychiatrist; Marion Powell, medical doctor; Graham Cotter, clergyman; and Bruce Vichert, social worker. Send questions to Youth Clinic, The Victoria Times, 2621 Douglas St., Victoria, B.C., V8W 2N4.

DEAR MR. VICHERT: I am 14, my boyfriend 16. I love him very much and I know he loves me. But one of my friends — I'll call her Sara — always manages to show up and somehow gets him to lose interest in me. They talk about sex, of all things! And they use words they know I don't understand. They make fun of me and it really hurts.

When Sara is around, my boyfriend always puts me down in front of her. He'll say something like "Sara looks better in a tight T-shirt than you do," or "Gee — you're getting fat!"

I wish she and he would both just stop. I can no longer take being torn between them.

ANSWER: You should find some new friends. I see no point in hanging around with people who put you down and are not loyal to you.

The world is full of people who can be kind, treat you with respect and would be proud to be your friend. I suggest you use your energy to find those people and stay friends with them.

DEAR DR. LEVINE: I'm going on 16 and have bad problems. I go to a boarding school and come home nearly every weekend. During the summer my boyfriend broke off with me after two years and I haven't had a boyfriend since.

School has been bugging me. Kids at school give me a real hassle. My mother is very protective and friends bug me about that, too.

I'm very scared of life and have slit my wrists four times. Nobody noticed at home. At times I'm so upset I run to find something to finish me off.

I'm scared to tell mom. I don't smoke or drink and I have dropped a lot of friends because of it. I need help by someone, but who? I'm very shy and can't afford to buy any help.

What if I try to kill myself again? Something might happen and I'll really do it. Please help me, sir; I need help bad.

ANSWER: You've obviously had a lot of recent difficulties. Losing a close boyfriend, and girlfriends, and being away from home all week is not easy for anyone.

You say that you have a "protective" mother. Even though your friends hassle you about this, you obviously feel close to her. Talk to her about your feelings and tell her that you want to see someone. You've obviously been doing more than just thinking about suicide and I would hate for you to "complete" the act.

Life can be worth living. It might be difficult for you to see that now, but with proper help you will feel considerably better. You mention that cost is an issue. All provinces have health insurance plans that will pay for treatment by many psychiatrists.

Family service agencies and youth agencies can also offer excellent service — counselling and therapy — which can be of great assistance to you.

Help is not far away. There is no reason why you should suffer in silence.

DEAR DR. POWELL: I'm 19 years old. Is it true that it's not permitted for cousins to marry? And what would happen to their children if cousins did marry — would they be retarded?

A lot of people seem to be confused about whether it's permitted. I have been real curious about this question for a long time as I cannot find the answer in books.

ANSWER: There is no law that states that cousins cannot marry. Some churches have certain rules relating to marriage between relatives, but these are not strictly adhered to any longer by most churches.

One reason for this attitude towards close relatives marrying was because of the increased risk of inherited diseases occuring in the children born to such a couple. Abnormalities can be passed from parent to child through defective genes. If the parents are closely related, the possibility carrying this gene may be doubled.

However, as a result of our research and knowledge about genetics, many of these defects can now be diagnosed before pregnancy. Any history of an inherited disease in relatives would make an individual thinking about marriage and children want to have genetic counselling to see what risk they face of having a child born with a genetic defect.

If there is no known history of any genetic disease, there is no reason for cousins not to marry. On the other hand, some genetic diseases can occur in children even if there is no family history.

Retardation may be associated with some of the genetic diseases but plays no part in others. Children born to cousins face no greater likelihood of being retarded than any other children.

To sum it all up, there is no reason why cousins cannot marry in the eyes of the law. Many have married in the past. Nonetheless, it would be wise for such couples to discuss their chances of carrying a defective gene with their family doctors before marriage, or at least before they plan a pregnancy.

Love Them Oranges

TORONTO (CP) — Oranges, apples and bananas are the favorite fresh fruits in this country, recent statistics from Agriculture Canada show. The agency says that fruit and vegetable consumption by Canadians has been steadily increasing during the 1970s and that the average person eats 258 pounds of fruit and 127 pounds of vegetables annually, excluding potatoes, mushrooms and tomatoes.

Opening lead - three of hearts.

To lose a trick you don't have to lose and get back two in exchange is obviously a sound transaction. The opportunity to do this seldom arises, but, when it does, the opportunity should be seized with both hands.

West led the three of hearts, a marked singleton. Prospects of making the slam were rather poor after East covered dummy's ten with the queen and declarer won with the ace. South now had two heart losers and it seemed likely he'd lose them both.

Declarer realized that his best plan was to ruff dummy's clubs and hope that the ace would fall in time to make the king a trick. Accordingly, he led a trump to the queen, ruffed a club, led a trump to the king, ruffed another club, then played a low diamond to the ten, and ruffed a third round of clubs. When the ace did not fall, it seemed certain that declarer would have to go down one.

But South was not yet ready to give up. He next cashed dummy's A-K of diamonds and then played the king of clubs. When East followed suit with the queen, South realized that he now had the slam in the bag.

Instead of ruffing the club, he discarded a heart. As a result, South lost a club trick he didn't have to lose, but the trick soon came back with interest.

West took the club king with the ace but had to return a diamond or a club. In either case, South would ruff in dummy and discard his last heart to bring home the slam.

Declarer started with one plan — hoping that the club ace would fall — but he shifted to another when the original plan failed. A declarer should always stand ready to modify a plan that can no longer succeed.

The Lord is my Shepherd
I shall not want
He maketh me to lie down in green pastures
He leadeth me beside the still waters
He restoreth my soul
He leadeth me in the path of righteousness for his name sake
Yea though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death
I will fear no evil
For thou art with me, thy rod and thy staff they comfort me
Thou preparest a table before me in the presence of mine enemies.
Thou anointest my head with oil
My cup runneth over
Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life and I will dwell in the House of the Lord forever.

Lowdown On Sprouts

Brussels sprouts are miniature head cabbage produced from growth buds on the main stem, the name "Brussels" indicating the area in Europe from which the best strains are obtained.

In my experience the cultural instructions given in some seed catalogues apply to commercial crops grown in eastern Canada and have to be modified to suit the local climate and the needs of the home gardener.

Here on the west coast the plants remain in the open all winter. The instructions to cut off the tops of the plants in August so that the "entire crop can be picked before the ground freezes" fortunately do not apply here.

Another point to be considered is our long but slow growing season which does not make possible "September harvesting of the whole crop" from an outdoor sowing of seed made on the recommended 25 May sowing date.

We do well if we get good pickings from late November over Christmas on well-established plants set out in late May. A supply for January-February is obtained from a sowing of seed made the same day as the first plants are set out.

As the buttons (sprouts) form, the leaves are removed a few at a time from the bottom up, leaving the top-knot of leaves until it is necessary, to speed up the development of the last buttons at the top of the stem.

Essentially the difference in culture is geared to the difference between harvesting for market and for use in the home. The catalogue often stress those varieties which can be cleaned in two pickings, a feature that suits the commercial grower more than varieties which need several pickings over a period of weeks.

The home gardeners has no desire to gather the entire crop in two pickings. A variety which matures slowly and evenly to give the family two pickings a week over a long period is more suited to our seasons for growing at home.

In reading the catalogue descriptions, you will notice that harvesting dates range from September to the first week of November, it being assumed that freezing temperatures and snow will then destroy the plants. This could well happen over most of Canada, but is unusual here.

The hybrid varieties of Brussels sprouts produce a heavier crop then the open-pollinated varieties.

It is under the heading of hybrids we find the popular Jade Cross (95 days), and Jade Cross E (97 days), the latter being a little taller and carrying a few more sprouts, which may be a space-saving feature in some gardens. Both have been highly rated by local gardeners.

Peer Gynt (135 days) and Topscore (138 days) both produce hard round buttons, dark green in color, and better suited to freezing than the looser varieties.

The key to obtaining sprouts as tight as the variety is capable of producing is to set out the plants in soil which has been well compacted.

A regular practice is to set all cabbage and related greens in the walks between the rows of early peas where the pickers have trodden the soil firm.

Holes for the plants are made with a trowel, the handle of which is used to pound the soil tight around the roots. In exposed locations the plants are tied to stakes to prevent wind from rocking them and loosening or breaking the roots.

Sprouts are better flavored after a few sharp frosts. Fertilizer should not be applied after August because hardened growth is necessary on the plants that are to produce over winter.

Twin Border Flare-Ups Trouble for Khomeini

By RONALD KOVEN

TEHRAN (WP) — Major difficulties have erupted for the Iranian revolutionary government in widely separated eastern and western frontier regions.

The troubles underscored the disorganization of the month-old Islamic revolution and the extent to which the central government risks losing control in various separatist-inclined regions.

With a national referendum scheduled for March 30 on the establishment of an Islamic republic, the country's many regional ethnic groups have maximum leverage now to get pledges of strong autonomy from Tehran. Otherwise, the Kurds, Baluchis, Turcomens, Azerbaijainis and the Arabs of the southwest could be strongly tempted to vote no in the referendum.

For this and other reasons, not least the apparently complete lack of logistical preparation for the vote, there is widespread speculation that the referendum may be postponed.

In the west there was heavy fighting in one of the main Kurdish towns between autonomists and a local military garrison. The fighting, in which there was a number of dead and wounded, apparently ended after more than 24 hours with an official cease-fire following the personal intervention of revolutionary leader Ayatollah Khomeini.

In the east, Iran closed its borders with Afghanistan to prevent an influx of refugees, only to be accused by the pro-Soviet government in Kabul of working a trick to cover up for the infiltration of 4,000 Iranian troops within a group of 7,000 refugees turned back at the Iranian border.

Informed sources dismissed the idea that the demoralized Iranian army could possibly mount such an operation, but they noted that heavily armed Baluchi tribesmen have been taking advantage of the anarchy in the region to infiltrate from Iran into Afghanistan to help fellow tribesmen in revolt against Kabul government.

The Iranian government denied for the second day in a row that it has any desire to mix in Afghan affairs.

The Tehran government apparently felt the need to reiterate its denial because of a strong statement by one of the leading figures in the Iranian revolution, Ayatollah Kazem Shariat-Madari of Qom, accusing the Afghans of massacring thousands of Shiites, including 170 religious figures. He called on Moslems throughout the world to rally to the cause of the Afghan Shiites.

Shariat-Madari is senior to Khomeini in protocol, and Shariat-Madari's statement was widely seen as a bid to reassert his standing as leader of the Iranian Shiites.

Reports from Kurdistan in the west were sketchy, but the Tehran government's strong reaction made it clear that it was taking very seriously the situation in the region, which has a history of separatism.

The troubles nevertheless appeared to be largely confined to Sanandaj, one of the larger Kurdish towns near the border with Iraq, which also has a large and rebellious Kurdish minority.

Library Meet Set

Proposals for improving communications between the library and users will be discussed an an inaugural meeting of the Friends of the Greater Victoria Public Library Wednesday at 8 p.m. in the Central Library, 794 Yates.

Other business will include fund raising for specific purposes and special assistance projects.

The society was formed in response to interest in the library and a desire for citizen participation in library matters.

Leadership Roles Switch for Schools

Allowing more teachers decision-making powers will significantly improve the education system, Greater Victoria schools superintendent Allan Stables said Monday night.

Opening decision-making positions to teachers will create more administrative opportunities for women, particularly at the elementary level, Stables said during a school board meeting.

He said rearranging school administrative structure won't cost the district any additional money.

Trustees started discussing Monday a list of policy changes that would alter the administrative hierarchy at both the elementary and secondary levels, but tabled the issue when they ran out of time.

The instruction-administration department recommends the board create a more flexible approach to administrative positions by establishing what Stables called alternate leadership patterns.

The policy should be put into effect as vice-principal and other administrative positions below that of a principal open up in the district, the report recommends.

It says alterations to the existing structure are possible under the Public Schools Act and the district's own regulations.

Grandstanding Ruled Out

Politicians who plan to grandstand at a public discussion tonight of Greater Victoria school board's budget will be disappointed, board chairman Carol Pickup warned.

Pickup said the meeting, between the board and Greater Victoria and Oak Bay municipalities and the Capital Regional District, has been set up to to preclude disturbances by unruly participants.

She said the meeting, scheduled for 7:30 p.m. in the board's media centre at 3128 Foul Bay Road, will be confined to an analysis of the budget and education financing in general.

The meeting will include presentations be district administration and should be aimed at finding a way for the board and municipalities to co-operate.

Last month Oak Bay Ald. Peter Bunn said the board's proposed operating budget was grossly incompetent and requested an immmediate meeting with trustees. Other municipalities also wanted to discuss the budget, but the board decided to postpone any meeting until the education ministry handed down its final budget allocation.

Saanich and Esquimalt will not be attending the meeting because of prior commitments.

Neilson Hiking Candy

TORONTO (CP) — William Neilson Ltd., Canada's largest manufacturer of candy bars, announced Monday that the retail price of its bars will increase to 30 cents.

Neilson president Don McCarthy said the increase was due to the increase in the cost of cocoa for which Canadian manufacturers have to compete internationally with a devalued dollar.

While spokesmen for the other major candy bar manufacturers were unavailable for comment, Rowntree predicted last month that the 30-cent candy bar would arrive in early 1979, and Bruce Stock, spokesman for the parent company of Lowney's, said a decision will be made shortly on the price of its candy bars.

Ferries On Ice For Day Two

NORTH SYDNEY, N.S. (CP) — Passengers and crewmembers stranded aboard two ferries off Cape Breton kept a sharp lookout today for a friend steaming in from the Gulf of St. Lawrence.

As day two of the ice-grip on the CN Marine Ferries Sir Robert Bond and Marine Atlantica dawned grey, snowy and windy, the 227 frustrated passengers awaited the arrival of the Louis S. Laurent, Canada's most powerful icebreaker.

The wind was the main problem for the two ferries and the smaller icebreaker Labrador which has been struggling against the ice for two days.

The northwest wind is holding the piled ice against the shore.

A southerly wind — and none is in prospect immediately — would move the ice back out to sea and clear the way for the stranded ships.

Once the St. Laurent reaches the area, however, she is expected to turn her attention first to a third ship stuck in the area. The small tanker Imperial Bedford will be freed.

The Marine Atlantica has 168 passengers aboard and the Bond has 59.

Paris Pied Piper Plays Peking

WIDE-SHOULDERED model struts his stuff at Peking show.

By JOHN FRASER
The Globe and Mail

PEKING — Radical chic hit Peking Monday in the form of a Pierre Cardin fashion show held in a revolutionary hall just a few blocks from the mausoleum of Chairman Mao Tse-tung.

If I hadn't seen it with my own eyes, it would have been impossible to believe.

In front of an audience of more than 300 Chinese textile workers and sellers, the Pied Piper of Paris fashion flaunted some of his most outrageous designs for men and women.

In China, people measure clothing by the number of cotton coupons they can get from the state every year, which doesn't leave much room for fashion.

See-through blouses, dresses with sufficiently generous slashes down to sides to expose the handsome flanks of Parisian models, gentlemen in thigh-tight pants, space-age shoulder pads — all this and more was displayed to the Chinese, who took it a lot better than most of the foreigners present.

Disco music blared out in the large hall of the Nationalities Palace on Chang An Avenue. The white stage and fashion ramp was adorned with Cardin's name in Chinese characters and the master himself was there to personally handle nearly every detail, including the remarkable feat of persuading Chinese officials to let the uninvited press inside.

Cardin came to China last year at the invitation of several Chinese state textile concerns. Impressed by the quality of silks, cashmeres and other fabrics, his firm has decided to import large quantities for his fashion lines. Also impressed by cheap labor costs in China, Cardin has arranged to have some of his less exotic lines produced in China for export.

The fashion show was designed to show Chinese textile workers what the world of Western fashion was like, and they sure found out. The Chinese, no doubt fully aware of the propensities of the Western press with a story like this, made sure no journalist got an invitation, and entrance was only possible by invitation. What the Chinese hadn't figure on was Cardin's own love of press coverage, nor how ferocious and courageous the Peking press corps can be (when their numbers are sufficiently large to summon up the ferocity and the courage).

The result was 15 minutes of sheer pandemonium at the entrance gates, as journalists traded insults and threats with the toughest-looking Chinese bouncers you ever saw.

In between was Cardin, a mild-mannered and soft-spoken man who at this precise moment resembled nothing so much as the ball in the fiercest game of ping pong ever played. At one point, he himself could not get back into the hall because he couldn't produce an invitation.

It was at this juncture that the Japanese press corps arrived in a solid phalanx and an irreversible forward movement began which could have barged through the Great Wall if necessary.

Earlier in the day, Cardin had unleashed some of his wilder concoctions on the masses. Some of his models were sent into the streets where the people of Peking provided

U.S. May Block Bargain Flights

Times News Services

The U.S. government has warned Canada it may block efforts by Air Canada to introduce bargain flights to the United States in retaliation for similar action earlier this year by Canadian regulatory officials.

A spokesman for the Civil Aeronautics Board (CAB) in Washington said it doesn't object to Air Canada's cutting fares to boost its traffic. But the CAB is upset that Canada blocked similar efforts by U.S. airlines earlier this year for lower fares on flights into Canada.

"We're just a little annoyed and have really been wrestling with this thing," a CAB official who asked not to be identified said today.

In Ottawa, an external affairs spokesman said Canada hopes the U.S. will stop short of blocking bargain flights on certain American routes.

Canada is willing to give American airlines approval for matching cuts in rates on the same routes — Montreal-New York, Toronto-Los Angeles and Vancouver-New York, the spokesman said.

Further, Canada believes the short period involved for the bargain rates is a mitigating factor, he said. The bargain rates apply March 27 to May 7.

So far, all the U.S. has done is give a warning under the 1974 bilateral air agreement that it is dissatisfied with the Canadian decision to permit bargain rates on some routes.

Canada and the United States have an air agreement, last negotiated in 1974, that is to be discussed here April 18-20 by representatives of CAB and the Canadian Transport Commission. The issue may be settled by negotiation then if not earlier.

The CAB says it hasn't yet made up its mind to block the Air Canada proposals, which basically are for temporary fare cuts for flights to most U.S. points except Florida. But a "notice of dissatisfaction" was filed by U.S. officials which gives them the right to suspend the Canadian fares if it is felt they might hurt the domestic industry.

"We generally like the lower Air Canada fares and we have so indicated to the government of Canada and to the air transport committee (of the Canadian Transportation Commission)," the CAB official said.

Among U.S. airlines that have had fare proposals blocked by Canadian regulatory officials are Western Air Lines, United Air Lines, Allegheny Airlines and Hughes Airwest.

Their proposals included two-passenger excursion fares to allow a companion accompanying a full-fare passenger to fly for half-price at certain times.

Most of the objections to these and other U.S. proposals for lower cross-border

Another Treaty Tempest

Times News Services

Israel and Egypt clashed today over the future of Jerusalem and the Palestinians in their first public disagreement since U.S. President Jimmy Carter's Middle East visit.

Egyptian Prime Minister Mustafa Khalil, however, said he said he doubted the dispute would impede the treaty signing, scheduled for next Monday in Washington.

Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin told his parliament that Israel would never allow a Palestinian state in the West Bank of the Jordan River or the Gaza Strip or return East Jerusalem to the Arabs.

Begin said he was replying to a statement by Khalil that Israel will have to withdraw to the borders that existed before the 1967 Arab-Israeli war, surrender Arab Jerusalem and accept Palestinian statehood. He declared:

"My dear, honorable Dr. Khalil, write this down: Jerusalem, the one Jerusalem, is Israel's eternal capital. It will never be divided again."

In Cairo, Khalil said Begin's statement "spoils the atmosphere" of the treaty and said called it "an unsuccessful beginning to a period in which we had hoped that all parties would work . . . for a just and lasting peace and a compre-

Saudis Retaliating For Ontario Law

TORONTO (CP) — Saudi Arabia, Canada's largest trading partner in the Middle East, is tightening its visa-granting policies in response to Ontario's law prohibiting companies from supporting an Arab boycott of trade with Israel.

Omar Bamanie, a counsellor with the Saudi Embassy in Ottawa, said Ontario's response to the Arab boycott might result in Canada's losing millions of dollars in contracts with Saudi Arabia.

Saudi Arabia might increase its protest of the Ontario law by refusing to deal with Canadian companies. In January, Saudi Arabia began restricting visas to Canadian businessmen.

The Ontario legislation, passed last November, makes it illegal for Ontario companies to agree to boycott Israel. The law provides for fines of up to $5,000 for individuals and $50,000 for companies.

Saudi Arabia accounted for $234 million in Canadian exports in 1978. Canada exported goods worth $76 million to Israel in 1978.

Bamanie said his country could go elsewhere for the products it purchases from Canada and said the Ontario legislation is against Canadian interests.

External affairs department officials said there have been recent meetings with officials at the Saudi Embassy to try to ease their concerns.

Winnipeg Still Wintry

WINNIPEG (CP) — Freezing drizzle closed Winnipeg International Airport today, and motorists were being advised against travel in many areas of southern Manitoba.

Icy runways caused the airport to shut down at 1:45 a.m. PST and a Transport Canada spokesman said a decision on whether to reopen would be made later today.

The runways were covered with up to half an inch of ice. Cold temperatures accompanying the drizzle meant that chemicals used to melt the ice could not handle the problem.

Meanwhile, the provincial department of highways was advising against travel in the Selkirk, Carman, Brandon, Minnedosa and Dauphin areas where highways were reported to be extremely slippery.

Highways in the rest of the province were generally bare.

A spokesman at the Winnipeg bus depot said most buses were arriving on time or about 15 minutes late.

Loto Lagging in Sales, Trying for a Miracle

OTTAWA (CP) — An Ontario Conservative said Monday lagging ticket sales prompted Loto Canada to enter into a special marketing arrangement with Miracle Mart which he said will eventually destroy the lottery system.

Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo) said Loto Canada will be able to sell only 3.5 million of 5.5 million tickets for draw No. 12, to be held March 30. Two million of the $10 tickets, worth $20 million, will be returned unsold, he told the Commons.

In an attempt to bolster sales, the federal lottery corporation had signed a special arrangement to sell "merchandising giant" Miracle Mart 5,000 tickets, bypassing Loto Canada's own wholesalers.

Sports Minister Iona Campagnolo said she would ask Loto Canada for a report. She later told reporters sales of 3.5 million tickets would not be out of line with usual sales.

"Lotteries go up and down. They have fluctuating sales."

Beatty said the deal with Miracle Mart will give the company a 100-per-cent larger profit on lottery ticket sales than other retailers get. Miracle Mart would make 90 cents on every $10 ticket sold, while retailers who buy from Loto Canada wholesalers made only 45 cents.

Beatty said he and other MPs have had phone calls from Loto Canada's wholesalers and retailers who are upset by the Miracle Mart deal.

He said Loto Canada originally predicted it would sell 4.5 million tickets for this draw.

Union Bosses Enter

VANCOUVER (CP) — Several top officials of the Teamsters Union crossed a picket line Monday set up by striking office workers at the Teamsters head office here.

Peter Wilson, a Teamsters spokesman, said the move was necessary to prevent a disruption in crucial union business. Officials crossed the line in their role as employers, he said.

A spokesman for Local 15 of the Office and Technical Employees Union said about 25 union members started the picket action because the Teamsters have [illegible] to sign a master contract settlement that has been agreed to by most of the 80 other trade unions that employ OTEU members in their offices.

The Teamsters also are trying to take away union involvement in hiring procedures, she said.

Secret Report Raps Logging

By MARK HUME
Times Staff

Logging steep mountain slopes in the Queen Charlotte Islands causes slides and massive soil erosion, according to a confidential forest service report obtained by the Times.

The study directly contradicts official statements by the forest service that the danger of slides in the area is minimal.

The report, completed last February, says there are no preventive methods known to logging science and the only way to avoid slides in some areas is to leave trees uncut.

The report is based on a study undertaken in the Rennell Sound area, where the provincial forest service and federal fisheries authorities are currently battling over a 10-acre tract of timber overlooking a salmon stream.

The forest service wants the timber harvested but fisheries has banned cutting claiming it will trigger slides.

But the report states clearly that because of steep grades, heavy rainfall and intense seismic activity, slopes in the Rennell Sound area are extremely unstable.

The document says tree roots mesh the slopes together, and once the timber is removed slides are inevitable in steep areas.

It says since Feb. 1978, there have been 71 slides in logged zones around Rennell Sound.

The average area covered by slides was 840 square metres and one slide wiped out a 73,566-square-metre section and caused the temporary damming of a stream.

The report says the majority of debris avalanches took place within three years following logging.

"Time of failure after logging and landscape position suggest that debris flows are a direct result of tree canopy removal and the subsequent increase in soil moisture and deterioration in root strength," states the document.

"The biological nature of the reinforcing root web becomes apparent following

The BCGEU, in its plan to improve its image and educate the public as to what the union is all about, is currently spending about $100,000 on a series of ads on individual BCGEU members and their jobs.

John Fryer, obviously pleased by the response to the ads, now is talking about organized labor getting its message across as an entity. How best to do it?

Well while some within labor think the best bet would be for the B.C. Federation of Labor to put out its own weekly or daily newspaper, Fryer is hanging in for a labor-owned radio station.

Some consultants have apparently said a sum of $500,000 or so should do it and Fryer feels labor wouldn't have too much trouble coming up wuth that kind of cash.

The new satellite television coverage of the House of Commons debate is going over well with cable subscribers now able to compare what they see on their screens with what they read in their newspapers that day.

Cable 10 audiences have reacted favorably, program director Bruce Lowther said.

Programs come in by satellite and are of better quality than the previous taped debates, which were broadcast the following day.

Permission to use the communications satellite was granted to the CBC for a network covering 15 major Canadian cities for a 30-day test period.

Lowther said he expects the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission to renew the arrangement following the parliamentary summer recess.

The lady behind the Smile campaign and the Captain Cook bicentennial celebrations cooked up some some smiles today when she was honored as Marketer of the Year.

The accolade for former tourism minister Grace McCarthy came from the 125-member B.C. chapter of the American Marketing Association.

Acknowledging last year's tourism boost to B.C.'s economy, the association said McCarthy was selected for the award "for her outstanding leadership and energy in changing the tourism ministry from an administrative function into a highly successful and aggressive marketing force."

A slogan contest to promote the designation of May as Hearing Awareness Month is being held by the Deaf and Hard of Hearing Institute.

Members of the public are invited to submit slogans of 10 words or less which could be used with a poster planned for the May campaign.

All slogans should be related to hearing impairment, the prevention of hearing loss, or communication with the deaf and hard of hearing, keeping in mind the Year of the Child theme.

The contest closes April 6. Prizes will be awarded to those whose slogans are used for the Hearing Awarness campaign.

Submissions should be made to: Hearing Awareness Slogan Contest, Deaf and Hard of Hearing Institute, No.7-671 Fort St., Victoria, B.C. V8W 1C7.

Some people are, as they say in the credit trade, "slow pay." But it's not always their fault.

Take the case of a classified ad customer at our paper who hadn't paid a bill for $10.20. His payment finally came in this week in an envelope postmarked July 16, 1975.

Where had it been for almost four years? That's one of those questions the Canada post office hates to be asked.

The Plantarium is blooming well still in business.

Last week a Times story said the company was one of four that had gone out of business since the Shopping Spree coupon book hit the streets.

Not so, says plant store manager Gary Delo. Indeed, he says, things have never looked greener.

The confusion arose out of the fact the company moved from the basement of the Commerce Mall at View and Douglas to a new street-level site at 1692 Douglas, not far from the Bay, while the article was being prepared.

Incidentally, Delo says he's honored thousands of the coupons for free plants over the months and will continue to do so until the offer expires April 30.

'It's a Way of Making Justice Work Better'

By AB KENT
Times Staff

A boy of 16, a 28-year-old woman and a 24-year-old man paid their dues in a select Victoria group last year and happily let their membership lapse.

Each had broken the law and been convicted, respectively, for theft, impaired driving and pointing a pellet gun.

Each was sentenced to donate spells ranging from 24 to 60 hours of labor in community service as part of their punishment.

These three performed their community service sentences in praiseworthy fashion and because of the salutary effect of the experience will probably never show in court again.

They were among 493 individuals ordered by Greater Victoria courts in 1978 to a perform a total of 31,857 hours of unpaid work under the Community Service Order program of the corrections branch.

"It's one way of making the criminal justice system work better," says Graham Ross-Smith, director of the program for Vancouver Island.

"It definitely benefits the younger people. They are made aware that they have to live up to their obligations," said youth worker Laurie Smith, who has supervised many hundreds of hours of community service orders.

Repeaters are rare, which is some indication of its effectiveness.

But those who muff their first chance by committing another offence before their order expires, or renege on their allotted hours of work are unlikely to be considered a second time.

Ross-Smith said an offender who completes an order satisfactorily and fulfils any other condition of probation may be eligible for the program if he subsequently commits another offence.

Community service officer Will McGaghey, who joined the branch last April, said repeaters are infrequent: "I've only had two since I've been here."

On the other hand, he knows of four cases where the CSO experience led to full-time employment.

Police, who generally have little involvement with the program, are aware of the public benefits.

Community relations officer Sgt. John Maybin of Victoria police thinks compensation to the victims of crime is one of the desireable aspects of the CSO program.

A judge may order some form of reparation in cases where an injury or property damage is caused.

"I think it has some merit in making the criminal realize the injury he has caused to a victim or the community, and one way of paying for it," Maybin said.

"The individual is paying, not the community. It's on his back, not on our pocketbook."

About 50 institutions or agencies in Greater Victoria are drawn upon as community service resources which can benefit from the hours of free labor assigned by a court.

They include Cool-Aid, the Salvation Army, the Oak Bay recreation centre, the Native Friendship Centre, the SPCA, the George Pearkes clinic and Harbor Lights.

The 16-year-old mentioned earlier was convicted of theft under $50 and was ordered to do 24 hours of general maintenance work supervised by the rec centre staff.

His performance sheet rated him as a good worker.

The impaired woman driver did 150 hours of janitorial duty for the Salvation Army, which was pleased with her work.

The man who pointed the gun was assigned to 60 hours of duty and also did a good job — when he showed up.

But a 17-year-old male given 200 hours of community service at the Christmas Hill nature centre after conviction for several break-ins and thefts performed only 19 hours before committing another theft.

He was referred back to his probation officer and was to be charged with breach of probation.

An offender serves time on the end of a paint brush

Laurie Smith of Cool-Aid said CSOs are a good alternative to jamming the jails.

"It's good for us. We get jobs done like maintenance and upkeep on the building, janitorial work, some trades like carpentry."

Ross-Smith said not all victims of crimes want the perpetrator to repair damage or perform a service. Some, especially old age pensioners, want nothing more to do with the culprit.

Ross-Smith says so far, trade unions have wanted to co-operate in the CSO program. He finds they consider it part of their obligation to society although it could be argued the donated hours take potential jobs away from union members.

Out of the 31,857 hours of community service work ordered in Greater Victoria last year, 27,454 hours were completed, which Ross-Smith considers a high proportion.

Only 74 of the 493 cases were complete failures, Ross-Smith said.

He calculates each hour donated to be worth $3, for a total in the Greater Victoria area last year of $82,362.

Grouse Nest Appeal Vetoed

Hasaam Kamil has lost his battle to retain ownership of his luxurious Grouse Nest estate at East Sooke.

The Supreme Court of Canada Monday refused to hear a petition by Kamil and his wife Lenore for an appeal on a B.C. Court of Appeals decision.

The 560-acre waterfront property is now expected to fall into the hands of Laurel Properties Ltd. of Vancouver.

Ken Yule, a Vancouver lawyer representing the firm, said today an injunction obtained last week preventing sheriff's officers from serving a writ of possession has been dissolved by mutual consent.

The Kamils bought the property 18 years ago with the intention of converting the place into a luxury resort. The resort opened in 1964 but closed two years later.

In March, 1976 the Kamils obtained a $1.35 million mortgage from Laurel Properties. The mortgage, at 24 per cent interest, came due a year later. But no payments were ever made.

The company obtained an order from the B.C. Supreme Court last June to seize the property. The Kamils appealed but their application was turned down by the B.C. Court of Appeals in September.

More Students Flooding Market for Summer Work

By AL FORREST
Times Staff

Competition for student jobs will be a little tougher this year, Youth Employment Centre manager Susan Vallor said today.

"There will be a few more jobs but there will be more students looking for them," she said.

In addition, students are better prepared than in the past for the job-hunting process and they know about dressing well and preparing resumes.

"This makes it harder for those who don't prepare for the job search. Remember, being qualified doesn't guarantee that you will be hired. Employers hire only the best qualified people," Vallor said.

The Youth Employment Centre at 2653 Douglas will open May 1 to handle the rush of student job-hunters.

First jobs available will be for waiters, waitresses and other hospitality industry jobs as well as some office positions and a few government positions. Later in the summer some casual garden work will become available.

The centre helps find summer jobs for anyone returning to school in the fall. Those looking for permanent work should apply at the main Canada Employment Centre, 810 Fort.

The Youth Employment Centre placed 1,500 students in jobs last summer out of 6,000 who applied.

The totals in both categories will be slightly higher this year, Vallor said.

He suggests students begin now by preparing their resumes and, if possible, discussing job-hunting with their school counsellors.

In addition, they should start an independent search for jobs through friends and relatives.

"Above all, students should be aware of the importance of first impressions. Some young people enquire about jobs dressed in blue jeans and they think they will dress up when they come back for the interview. But by then it's too late. Employers always judge by first impressions and too often the student isn't invited back for an interview. They've alredy blown it."

In addition to the federal Youth Employment Centre, there is a youth job-hunting office run on a year-around basis by the provincial government at 808 Douglas. Many of these jobs are permanent but some casual work is available.

Young people are advised to apply at both offices.

County Gov't Eyed by B.C.

B.C. is looking into the county system of government favored by U.S. states and some Canadian provinces, Municipal Affairs Minister Bill Vander Zalm said today.

The minister said ministry officials are looking at county governments in Washington, Oregon, Alberta and Ontario to see if any aspects of their systems can be adapt[illegible] use in B.C.

"What we are attempting to accomplish in part is a reduction in government and a reduction in bureaucracy," the minister said.

A county system in a few areas of Alberta has done away with school boards, hospital boards and regional boards, Vander Zalm said.

They have all been combined into a county government consisting of an elected body, headed by a reeve and with county members on the board.

Walkway Link Proposed

Central Saanich council is considering a proposal to construct a 1½-mile walkway joining the municipality's two major communities of Brentwood and Saanichton.

Municipal clerk Fred Durrand said today the walkway would have the dual purpose of providing greater protection for children walking to and from school and a better pathway for horse-riding.

Sympathy from Pickup On CUPE Job Stand

Greater Victoria school board chairman Carol Pickup said today she sympathizes with the Canadian Union of Public Employees opposition to a provincially-funded summer student job program.

"I'm not completely out of sympathy with part of the union's position," Pickup said.

She said she understands CUPE's reluctance to endorse the creation of 40 jobs in the district for students when permanent staff have been laid off during the last few years.

"They almost see this as a [illegible] slap in the face," Pickup said.

CUPE local 947 president Helen Bell said Monday the union will not allow a ministry of labor-funded Youth Employment Program to take place in the district unless the students receive union wages.

Union scale starts at $5.13 an hour, but the maximum wage provided under the program is $3.20 an hour.

Pickup said the situation is indicative of the bad labor relations climate locally and in other parts of Canada.

If the school district had better relations with its employees, the program would probably go ahead, she charged.

"[illegible] people see it (the youth employment program) as a direct threat to their own permanent jobs."

Trustees Adopt Policy of Regular Homework

By
LORRAINE LOCHERTY
Times Staff

A back-to-the-basics trend in education was reinforced Monday night when Greater Victoria school trustees voted to make regular homework official board policy.

The board spent 50 minutes debating the merits of homework before passing a motion by Trustee Susan Brice.

Brice said she received complaints from parents because there are no district-wide guidelines for assigning homework.

Some parents feel students receive too much homework, others thought they weren't getting enough and it's time the board took a stand on the issue, she said.

In a motion that paraphrases the Public Schools Act regulations, Brice said that homework is a necessary component of the education system and should be given in increasing amounts as students advance through the grades.

Homework assignments strenthen the day's classroom intruction and encourage good study habits, Brice said in support of the motion.

Schools superintendent Allan Stables will have the job of making sure the board's new policy is carried out. The homework policies of each school will be decided during meetings between Stables with staff and parents.

Stables, however, cautioned trustees not to "make rules you can't carry through."

He said the logistics of enforcing such a policy would be difficult and during an earlier discussion commented it would have little effect on the school system.

Brice said she doesn't expect changes overnight, but believes the new homework regulations will tighten up the system and give parents and students confidence a clearly defined board policy exists.

The homework policy was opposed by chairman Carol Pickup, who said it infringes on the rights of teachers to develop their own guidelines.

Pickup was without supporters John Young, Win Mott and Mary Breer, who were absent from the meeting.

The motion was solidly backed by trustee Peter York, who said it is time the district took a firm postion on the homework issue.

PSA regulations state that "homework shall contribute to the education growth" of students and set out maximum time limits for assignments in elementary, junior and senior secondaries.

Homework limits of one-half hour at the primary level, one hour in junior high school and two hours for senior high students are stipulated in the act.

Hit by Car, Boy, 4, Fair

A four-year-old boy is in fair condition in Royal Jubilee Hospital today with injuries he received when struck by a car in the 9900-block Resthaven, Sidney, Monday.

Deiter Pawluk received internal and head injuries in the mishap at 3:25 p.m.

Sidney RCMP are withholding the name of the driver of the car pending the outcome of their investigation.

Tight Skirt Guide

TORONTO (CP) — Sitting or standing, the skinny skirts for spring are going to look terrible if women don't learn how to walk and sit in a more graceful way, says a top Toronto model.

The full, bulky skirts women have been wearing have given them so much freedom of movement, says Yanka, that "you could cross one leg up over the other with a wide skirt and boots and get away with it."

"But you can't do that with a tight skirt and look ladylike.

"A tight skirt needs a slit on the side, front or back to enable you to walk," she said in a recent interview.

"Thigh-high slits that show a lot of leg are for evening. Slits for daytime are not as accentuated.

"If you sit down and cross your legs, make sure that your skirt is long enough to cover your knees. Shorter lengths are fashionable for spring so if there is less length, avoid crossing your knees.

"You'll look attractive if you sit gracefully, not slouched or bored looking and cross your ankles."

Yanka said a woman should "look reasonably composed."

"And don't be blatant about drawing attention to the slit or legs — the fact that the slit is there is enough."

Head Start To the '40s

By BERNADINE MORRIS
Times

PARIS — The tight, small, close-to-the-head hairdo has been replaced by loose pageboys and long hair loosely waved at the ends. The miniature disk hat perched on one side of the head has been replaced by big-brimmed, tilted styles.

Ribbon bows, feathers and other ornaments appear in the hair and the hats are frequently swathed in veiling.

All this is part of the 1940s feeling that pervades the spring and summer couture collections here.

It is worth noting that despite the emphasis on hats in recent collections, albeit the miniature variety, few of them have been seen on people, either at the shows or around Paris. Perhaps they'll fare better in the spring. Miniature hats are still seen in the collections, but they tend to look absurd.

While hats have not made it, high-heeled shoes have. There are fewer boots around on people, but even they have high heels. It would be too much for French women to turn their backs on fashion completely. They are not yet that liberated.

Pumps, often open-toed, have supplanted the ubiquitous sandal in the showings, though the barer shoes still exist, often in multicolor strips. Occasionally, seamed stockings are worn.

There's plenty of accessories news in the collections. Kid gloves are back, for day as well as night. They sometimes look silly, but sometimes they are amusing, as when Per Spook picks up the lemon yellow of a blouse in lemon-color gloves.

Marc Bohan at Christian Dior makes accessories essential when, for example, he cinches in a loose, flaring jacket with a leather sash so it looks small-waisted. He uses a lot of leather sashes. He also introduces an octagonal stiff leather handbag with his daytime clothes. It hangs from a shoulder strap and because of the broad, padded shoulders, it doesn't slip off.

An enamelled triangle-shaped pin is attached to hats as well as pinned to the shoulder of dresses and suits at Dior. Sometimes it is hung around the neck on a chain.

Stockings come in for their share of attention, too. Besides the seamed ones, there are stockings with a black band up the side at Dior and, at Ungaro, with rhinestones up the back, where the seam should be.

Jean-Louis Scherrer is also partial to accessories. He uses black satin gloves as well as the usual leather ones, encases the hair in snoods, which can be outlined in sequins, and favors open-toe pumps, as does Gerard Pipart of Nina Ricci. His favorite pin is heart-shaped and he likes rhinestone bracelets, too.

Big shawls have pretty much evaporated, but Yves Saint Laurent introduces a different kind of scarf. It's oblong, usually in chiffon, and he's so fond of it he drapes two together around the neck. Navy and white, for intance, with a navy suit. Or two pale neutrals, like taupe with beige. Sometimes he ties a couple of scarves around the wrist. There can also be a rhinestone bracelet nesting along with them. That's how he builds up the drama for his one-shoulder black jersey sheaths. Who knows where it will all lead? Maybe to scarves pulled through rings on the finger, as in the 1930s.

But the double scarf as neckwear seems destined for a more immediate fashion role. It has a lot to do with softening the effect of the many tailored suits he shows. As a result, the suits never look too tough, even though the style is mannish. It's another case of the accessory helping the look along.

today's markets

Toronto

TORONTO (CP) — The Toronto stock market advanced fractionally in active mid-afternoon trading today.

Sigma Mines (Quebec) Ltd. gained ⅛ to $39⅛ following a brief halt at midsession for news that the company plans a two-for-one stock split, subject to shareholders' approval on April 27.

A trading halt continued in shares of Steintron International Electronics Ltd. at the company's request pending an announcement. The stock last traded at $5⅜.

The Ontario Securities Commission said it ordered a trading ban in Kappa Investments Ltd. for failure to make statutory findings. A hearing will be held April 3.

The commission also continued a cease-trading order of March 6 in Canuc Mines Ltd. pending the company making required filings.

Among industrials, Dome Petroleum rose 1½ to $124½, Biltmore Industries ⅞ to $6, Andres Wines A ¾ to $15¼, Controlled Foods ¾ to $6½ and Versatile Cornat ¾ to $13⅝.

And while the market has gained much of its power in recent days from rising oil-company stocks, those issues were hindered today, analysts said, by lack of indication of what President Carter and his top aides decided at their Camp David meeting Monday to do about crude oil deregulation.

Among the oil issues, Exxon rose ¼ to $54, Texaco dipped ¼ to $26⅜, Standard Oil of Indiana dropped ¼ to $60⅝, Gulf Oil slipped ¼ to $26¾ and Atlantic Richfield fell ¾ to $61⅞.

New York

Montreal

MONTREAL (CP) — Prices dropped slightly in moderate afternoon trading on the Montreal Stock Exchange, with the composite index falling 0.17 at 245.58. Volume was 394,203 compared with the 473,898 shares traded up to the same time Monday. CP Ltd declined ⅛ at $27⅞, Inco ¼ at $23¾, Stelco A ⅛ at $29⅞, Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce ⅛ at $26⅞ and BC Telephone one cent at $18.

London

LONDON (Reuter) — The London stock market fell moderately near the close of trading. The [illegible] Times index was down 2.6 to 507.1. Industrials were lower while mining shares moved narrowly as the bullion price edged higher. Canadian shares eased.
